The officers have to pass judgment because the next assembly meeting of the feder-ation is not until July 27, three days after the Queen opens the Sir Arthur Gold, chairman

Four life terms for Leoni's killer

By a Staff Reporter Unemployed labourer Gary Hopkins was sentenced yesterday to four terms of life imprisonment for murdering three-year-old Leoni Keating after kidnapping her from a caravan in Great Yarmouth last September, subjecting her to a night of sexual terror and flinging her, arms tied behind her back, into a drainage channel to drown.

The judge told Hopkins, aged 28. of Severn Way. Bedford, that he had showed a degree of callousness and depravity which is almost unbelievable." He recommended that he should serve a minimum of 25 years.

It took the jury at Ipswich Crown Court just over two hours to find Hopkins guilty and he began his sentence in solitary confinement. Hopkins had earlier admitted abducting Leoni from the caravan site where she was staying with her mother, Mrs Gail Keating, on a week's holiday for battered wives.

He had also pleaded guilty before the jury was sworn in on Monday to abducting two other young girls, hurglary and Hopkins, a formerly married man with two children. had first been in trouble for exposing himself to young girls when he was 14. His obsession with kidnapping young girls had led to a three-year pattern of abducting children from caravans. One girl, aged IO, was later left gagged with a pair of knickers and another kidnap victim. aged 14, was stahbed as she escaped from Hopkins.

Israeli Shin Bet leader From Ian Murray Jerusalem

Mr Avraham Shalom, head of Shin Bet, Israel's counter intelligence agency, resigned vesterday and was granted an immediate presidential pardou committed two years ago, after two captured Palestinian hus hijackers were handed over to the agency.

The amnesty, which has been extended to senior un-named officers who have not resigned, has made it impassible for Mr Yosef Harish, the new Attorney General, to launch a meaningful police or judicial enquiry, even though he legally has the right to do

It will also mean an end to any investigation into the roles played by Mr Shimon Peres and Mr Yitzhak Shamir, who have been the two Prime Ministers responsible for Shin Bet since the hijacking. At a meeting with the most senior members of the government Mr Harish said it was impossible for him to stop the police enquiry into the affair. which had been ordered by his predecessor. Mr Yitzhak Zamir. Since, however, it might be difficult to maintain the secrecy of such an investigation, he was prepared to set up a judicial enquiry.

It was at this point that Mr Shalom, who had been called to the meeting, offered his resignation and Mr Yitzhak Mioda'l, the Justice Minister, paid a midnight call to the presidential palace to be promised by President Harron that ised by President Herzog that the Shin Bet men would be given an amnesty.

Mr Harish said he was very disappointed at the onicome, hut conceded there would be no point in launching an enquiry when there was no way of prosecuting anyone once the evidence was collected. The most he was able to ohtain from the cabinet was agreement on a new special committee to set up future procedures for the way Shia Bet cheruten.

The only legal process on the case still continuing is the hearing before the High Cour of an appeal against unfair dismissai by Mr Rafi Malka. 2 former senior Shin Ser officer who was forced to leave the service after telling Mr Peres that the two Palestinians died on the orders of Mr Shalom. who then masterminded 2 cover-up. That case, being heard in secret, has been opened but adjourned. There are four no confidence motions tabled in the Knesset hy small left wing parties over the government's handling of the case. It was the Prince's second visit to the province - he was with the Queen on her Jubilee tour in 1977 - but for Miss Ferguson it was her first outing to the North and it came only 24 hnurs after the Reverend Ian Paisley, leader of the Democratic Unionist party, claimed that the province was on the verge of civil war.

But there was no sign of tension on the streets. However, as the couple arrived for their first engagement - the official opening of the £72 million tower block at Belfast City Hospital - police marksmen in boiler suits were on top of the sprrounding hoildings while others with binnoculars scanned crowds of nurses, doctors and hospital

Tories' £1m mail publicity effort

By Nicholas Wood, Political Reporter

The Conservative Party is to spend about £1 million on a publicity campaign aimed at winning the hearts and minds of about six million voters before the next election.

Key groups such as the young, home owners, parents with small children and the old will be sent a series of letters from party headquarters setting out the Government's thinking on political and social issues

They will also be asked to give their views on matters such as unemployment, social services, education and law and order as part of an imprecedented rolling survey of public opinion aimed at shaping the contents of the next Tory manifesto.

A computer data bank containing about three multon addresses will be used and the target six million are likely to be contacted several times during the course of the operation.

Some will be brought together in small groups to expand on their ideas about what should be done to tackle big political problems.

The campaign is also intended to raise money towards wiping out an overdraft which stands at about£1.5 million. Those contacted will be invited to make a contribution

The scheme is the brainchild of Sir Christopher Lawson, the marketing expert who helped to mastermind the 1983 election victory and who rejoined the Conservative Party's Central Office six weeks ago as Director of Special Services.

The campaign starts with a pilot mailingaimed at 10,000 people this week.

He said be was concentrating on direct mail because he did not believe other media such as television, radio and newspapers were as effective in getting a message across to people in their homes.

The object of the exercise was communication - to put the Conservative case and to listen to what people are saying — and any funds raised were merely a "by-product" of that process.

Echoing a familiar Tory refrain, Sir Christopher said the party was failing to get its message across in other ways".

The Conservatives used direct mail on a much smaller scale before the last election, reaching about 300,000 people in the 12 months before polling day.

The other parties have followed that lead, but, according to Sir Christopher, Central Office is confident that it can maintain its edge.

But the meeting decided by 184 votes to 169 that there should be no legal right of access to computerized re-cords, despite a plea from Dr John Marks, chairman of the BMA's comeil, that doctors should recognize that among the public "there is a great up-surge against paternalism and against the idea that doctor knows best".

Professor Bryan Carsberg, head of Oftel, the government watchdog for the telecom-munications industry, has started a study into the pricing formula imposed on Telecom at the time of privatization.

He is expected to decide in the autumn if it will have to be changed. If it is, there would be tighter limits on what Telecom could charge.

At present the overall charges for direct dialled inland telephone calls and ex-change line rentals can be increased only by three per-centage poiots less than the rate of ioflation.

That simple structure does not take into account the number of calls made. As that increases, they be-come more profitable because the related costs rise more slowly. Last week Telecom announced a 19 per cent

pires in 1989. But in Offel's 1985 annual report, published yesterday, Professor Carsberg says he would consider intro ducing a new price structure if British Telecom's rate of return on investment was too high. There is some concern that that is now the case. Oftel received 1,114 com

The maio areas of concern were tariffs and charges, quality of service and disputed lephone accounts.

Many arose from the new pricing structure imposed in November which increased the cost of local calls while cutting long-distance rates. Professor Carsberg says in his report that he will not allow that policy to be carried beyond what is justified on economic grounds,

She told Mr Julian Amery (Brighton, Pavilion, C), who said her meeting could have given that impression, that she had always made it clear, as had Sir Geoffrey Howe, Secretary of State for Foreign and Common-wealth Affairs, that the dialogue was to be between all groups.

She informed MPs that representations were being made to the South African Government in Loodon and Pretoria today about the state of emergency, arrests and detentions without trial

Mrs Chalker recalled that she had emphasized to Mr Tambo that violence could never lead to a solution of South Africa's problems and that a suspension of violence on all sides was dialogue and negoriations.

She had also stressed, during a candid and useful exchange of views, the British Government's continuing commitment to the early and complete elimination of opartheid. Mr George Robertson, an Oppo-

Bot this meeting would be seen as little more than a gesture unless it became part of a process of dialogue with real opinion in South Africa, a country described by Mrs Helen Suzman last night as being like a Latin American dictatorship, and a process of real pressure from meaningful sanctions.

HOUSING

Mr Nicholas Ridley, Secretary of State for Environment, made clear in the Commons that he would be looking to see how the appalling state of disrepair of local authority housing could best be dealt with. He took the situation seriously.

We have two things to do now (ho declared). We have first to see how best to clear up the errors and neglect of local authorities. Second, we have to put it fairly on the line that local authorities should not allow further neglect and deterioration.

Answering questions for the first time since being moved to the Department of the Environment, Mr Ridley indicated that he would be received. he would be meeting repre-sentatives of the local authority associations to discuss various housing issues at the Huusing Consultative Council meeting on July 8.

He told MPs: We should not let further disrepair take place or Whether it is done by allowing tenants to do it at their own expense or whether tenants nuv more so that the local authority can do it is a secondary issue. It should never have been allowed to happen in the first place.

The areas where the main disrepair had been allowed to grow tended to be in large municipal housing estates where there were very small receipts. The areas with large accu-mulated receipts tended to be in areas where the local anthority

FRIGATE DESIGN

Professor John Caldwell, President of the Royal Institute of Naval Architects is to head the inquiry into the relative merits of the short/fat or long/thin hull form for frigates, Lord Trefgarse, Minister of State for Defeoce Procurement, announced in a debate in the House of Lords on the 1986 defence estimates.

He said that the team of independent experts, which would decide whether the correct decision was made in 1983 to stick with the traditional design for anti-submarine ves-sels, was now being assembled by the professor.

It is not only that people, well trained and motivated as they, are likely to make mistakes which are extremely damaging and costly with modern equipment (he continued) but they will also begin to wonder whether they want to join or, having joined, whether they

Midibuses for London in autumn

Court plea on young offenders

By Frances Gibb Legal Affairs Correspondent

Juvenile courts should be abolished and replaced with a family court with jurisdiction over juvenile crime, the Na-tional Association for the Care and Resettlement of Offenders (Nacro) said in a briefing paper yesterday.

nearly 80 years ago, is nutdated; "steeped in the adversarial legalistic and punitive tradi-tions of the adult crimina justice system", and has language and procedures that baffle children and parents alike, it says.

It adds that there are "inor-dinate delays in getting cases heard" and that there has been too little effort to make proceedings more informal and increase participation by children and families.

The association says that a family court should be introduced "as soon as possible" for juveniles who admit of-fences or any juvenile crime that does not have to be tried at the Crown court or in the adult magistrates' courts.

The association says that too many juveniles are prose cuted under the present sys-tem, which involves them in court proceedings that can be damaging and confirm them in their delinquent activities. The paper also criticizes the selection of magistrates for the juvenile bench, as not sufficiently representative of yourger people from a cross-section of the community. The association proposes that such a court could be set up in a way that would incorporate the best features of the Scottish children's hearings, promnting participation and informality while retaining children's rights.

Senor Oscar Alzaga, who heads a group of 21 Christian Democrat MPs in the new Parliament, has resigned from the party chairmanship pending the executive meeting, a move seen by many as a ploy to see if Senor Fraga could be

The Christian Democrats whose example might be followed by the 12 right-wing Liberals who make up the third element of the coalition, have been shaken by the example of Senor Adolfo Snárez, their leader when they all belonged to the now defunct Centre Democratic Party, go-ing to the country and getting the votes for a band of 19 new more peaceful world". The President certainly does not do things by halves. He has an instinct for rhetorical overkill, which is liable on occasion to be as perplexing to his friends as to his neversaries. It is not even as if Mr Gorbachov's proposals were now consistent with Mr Reagan's vision of how to protect America.

"We cannot accept these particular proposals without change," the President de-clared, "but it appears that the Soviets have begun to make a serious effort." This implies that their ideas are at least moving in the right direction. Yet an integral part of the Soviet package is that the Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty should be strengthened so as effectively to prevent, or at tured after the bus was least to delay for many years, the deployment of SDL Mr Gorbachov is offering deep cuts in strategic nuclear arms, provided that the US agrees to extend to at least 15 years the notice that either side would have to give before withdrawing from the ABM treaty. This would permit SDI research to go ahead, but not deployment so long as the treaty was in force.

Reaffirming faith in SDI concept

Yet elsewhere in the Glassboro speech Mr Reagan was reaffirming his faith in the most ambitious concept of SDI. Today's research, he claimed, "might one day enable us to put in space a shield that missiles could not penetrate - a shield that could protect us from nuclear missiles just as a roof protects a family from rain".

That does not sound like the language of a man who is contemplating n compromise on SDI deployment. So there is a logical inconsistency in a speech which at the same time refers encouragingly to pro-posals that depend on such a

Why then did Mr Reagan say what he did? The unchari-table view will be that he has not taken on board the full menning either of Mr Gorbachov's proposition, or of his own words, or possibly both. It is not, after all, the first time that the President has ching firmly to incompati-ble objectives.

But it is too easily assume especially on this side of the Atlantic, that such an accounplished politician does not know what he is doing. I believe that the President was concerned not with the specifics of negotiation but with sending a political signal.

When subjected to close logical scrutiny the speech does not hold together. I suspect, however, that it had broader purpose. The virtual abrogation of Salt 2 did not have u favourable reception either in the US or abroad. It upset his allies and it made many Americans sceptical of his intentions. It therefore put him on the wrong side politi-cally of the arms control issue.

Sending a message loud and clear

What he has been trying to do now has been to correct that impression. He has been send-ing out a message load and clear that he is still comitted to the pursuit of arms control. that he wants a second summit with Mr Gorbachov and that he remains enlisted in the ranks of the optimists.

It is a message directed no doubt in part to the Soviet Union: Mr Reagan does not want the Geneva negotiations to collapse. But it is also presumably directed to the American voters who will be going to the polls in the mid-term elections in November.

This does not mean that be is insincere. But his speech should be taken as an expres-sion of goodwill, not as an indication of the progress that has been made. Whether Mr. Reagan appreciates it er not, the major obstacles still lie

It is believed to be the first time that a Soviet figure has admitted the existence of the disease in the Soviet Union. Professor Zhdanov reported that three other centres in Russia were treating Aids natients.

The first Aids case in the Soviet Union — that of a 14-year-old girl — had been identified in September 1984. Professor Zhdanov said. All blood donors were now being systematically tested for the

A glimmer of hope in the attempt to find an eventual treatment for Aids was given by an American team who reported on research into bone-marrow transplants, lymphocyte transfusions and an anti-viral drug.

Dr Anthony Fauci of the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Disease at Bethesda, Maryland, cautiously described their results as "an important step in the direction of treatment, but by no means a breakthrough". Dr Fanci told the conference, attended by nearly 2,000 scientists, doctors and others from throughout the world, that one Aids patient, aged 34, who had been treated over 10 months, had improved sufficiently to be able to return to full-time work.

Another two patients, aged 25 and 31, had died, however.

Professor Claude Griscelli, of the Necker Children's Hospital in Paris, spoke of increasing concern over the contam-ination of unborn babies by mothers carrying the virus. In May this year, 69 Aids cases among babies had been diagnosed in Europe and 289 in the United States, he said.

Of the 59 babies born to mothers carrying the Aids virus, who had been examined by the Necker Hospital over the past nine months, 13 were found to have the disease. including four who had already died; 14 appeared free of the virus at the age of six months; and the remaining 29 were still too young for a firm diagnosis to be made, Professor Griscelli said.

Forty-two had been born to mothers who were drug addicts, 10 to African or Indian mothers and one to a bisexual partner, while the remaining three were of unknown

There was good news for policemen who are threatened with being bitten by criminals claiming to have Aids. A study of 180 people caring for Aids patients in Canada showed 30 had been scratched or hitten but none had been infected.

Dr Halphan Mahler, direc-tor-general of the World Health Organization, reported there were now an estimated 30,000 to 100,000 Aids cases worldwide. Half would die within a year of being diagnosed, be said. A further 5-10 million people were believed to be infected and capable of transmitting the virus.

Millons To Day for crime they Won's

During the next session, the Government intends to introduce a Tape Levy. This presumes that everyone who buys blank tape will be guilty of an offence against copyright law.

In fact, it's worse than that. Not only is guilt presumed, but sentence is passed.

Even if you only use blank tapes to record your own voice or your own programs, you are about to be fined.

If you do use tape to keep your records in mint condition, you may technically be infringing our outdated copyright laws. But are you really offending the spirit of those laws, especially since you've already paid for the right to listen to your music any number of times?

A Tape Levy would be a fine which will cost you as much as 20% on top of the price you pay for every blank audio tape.

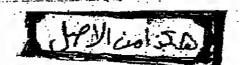

And the proceeds of the levy will go mainly to rich record companies and prosperous music publishers.

Fight for your innocence, and stop the rich getting richer. Help prevent the Tape Levy becoming law by contacting:

Oppose the Tape Levy. It's a gift to the greedy.

peace plan backed by Gandhi

From Vijitha Yapa Colombo

President Jayewardene of Sri Lanka yesterday told op-position representatives that Mr Rajiv Gandhi, the Indian Prime Minister, was happy about the island's proposal for devolution - put forward in a bid to end the country's continuing unrest.

At a conference with repre-sentatives of eight political parties, Mr Jayewardene said Mr Gandhi had written to him, saying he hoped the proposal would be imple-mented in full.

Mr Jayewardene said the unit of devolution would be the provincial council with an elected chief minister. The port of Trincomalee, in the eastern province, however, would be excluded from any area of authority.

He said the Bill to give legislative power for the provincial council would be in effect shortly.
"Sri Lanka is a mighty racial, mighty religious country. Let the past suspicions of these different groups be now forgotten to secure a better future for all," the President appealed to the opposition

He asked them to submit any suggestions about the proposal to him by July 11. Mr Jayewardene announced that a political parties' conference would be held daily from July 15 to July 18 to study the devolution proposal in detail.

THE TIMES PROFILE

he Taoiseach was in a hurry, rushing out of a meeting with visiting newspaper correspon-dents to be in time for the start of that day's parliamentary business. He delayed long enough to reveal that he had dreamt the night before that he had overslept, eventually rising to speak wearing only his pyjamas. It is difficult to think of many other Prime Ministers who would cheerfully tell this story to a clutch of complete strangers, and with so little guile. Garret FitzGerald bustled away, leaving a roomful of open-mouthed guests behind him. The Irish electorate have had longer than the journalists to get used to Garret (as he is universally known); whether they vote for him or not, the first thing most of them will say about bim is that he is so extraordinarily nice. "In a room", someone wrote of him recently. "women feel safe with him, but wish they didn't."

He has spent a good deal of time in the later part of his career suppressing bis niceness and accessibility io order to seem less of a garrulous, absent-minded professor and more of a tough and wordly statesman. On television, he has learnt to control his tendency to bob his Brillo-pad head of hair up and down io time with a list of rapid-fire points. The high-fliers of the Dublin civil service are oo hand to ensure that he does not appear in public wearing odd shoes. He once did so during a general election cam-paign to the predictable delight of his opponents; campaign press cooferences were devoted to chewing over the significance of this engaging error. His image on more serious matters has improved with time. He now makes fewer forced errors and his long-term aims appear as part of a more coherent strategy than they once did. That is by no means the same as saying that the ruling Fine Gael-Labour coalitioo can survive the next election, which must be fought by November 1987 at the latest and - if today's divorce referendum goes against the government's pro-posed liberalization - may well come much sooner. The last major opinion poll found Charles Haughey's Franna Fail leading the government by 12 points (although still falling short of an overall majority).

FitzGerald celebrated his sixtieth hirthday last February and head of his party. The verdict on his leadership is mixed. If he lost an election tomorrow, he would at least go down as the man who signed the Hillsborough Agreement with Margaret Thatcher. His "constitutional crusade" has faltered since its overconfident launch hut oevertheless regained some of its momentum. Fine Gael holds the largest number of Dail (parliament) seats in its history and the party has been vigorously

But he has not fought his way out of the vicious economic circle which has crippled several receot governments. Massive govern-ment borrowing requires heavy taxation of finance it; breaking out of the circle has pushed up unemployment although ioflatioo has fallen. No section of the electorate is happy. "Seveoteen per cent of them are out of a job", said one dispirited Cabinet minister the other day, "and the other 83 per cent think they're overtaxed."

A computer programmed to deliver the perfect political pedigree could hardly have improved on FitzGerald's parentage. Both father and mother were fervent nationalists; Desmood, a poet, had been born to Londoo to Irish emigraot parents and Mabel, who had worked as a temporary secretary to George Bernard Shaw, came from northern protestant stock. Both of them were inside the O'Connell Street Post Office in the Easter Rising of 1916.

The Legal and General insurance group launched, last month, The Art of Sensible Drinking, a video with the message that, whereas a few drioks may be harmless, too many people don't know where to stop. Indeed, some medical experts will soon cut by almost half the recommended safe limits. The Royal College of Psychiatrists recommended, in 1970, a maximum limit of eight drinks a day, or 56 units of alcohol a week. A unit equals a half pint of beer, a glass of wine or a single measure of spirits - a limit most experts have since recogoized as much too high. And there may have arisen a dangerous complacency among those who live and drink by it.

Dr Jonathan Chick, a consultant psychiatrist and coAlcohol Concern. Don Steele, director of Action on Alcohol Abuse, says:"Any man drinking more than four pints a day is going to do himself some physical harm. It is a myth that only alcoholics are harmed by their drinking."

History is seldom tidy. Even its more obvious patterns usually prove fragmented, yet the instinctive temptation to form schematic views will always be with us. For a subject as politically charged as the Spanish Civil War this is doubly true. Partly reflecting the old rivalries, three general tenden-cies can be identified amongst writers favourable to the Republican side: those basically loyal to the Communist version; then, what ooe might call the "social democrat school": and finally a disparate band of liberal or left libertarians, All are represented in this flurry of books for the war's fiftieth sented a problem. The amount be manages to cram io is impressive, but that does not make it easy to read.

Their analysis of the Republic's situation could be summarized as follows. The governmental collapse of July 1936 necessitated tough measures to restore order and provide an effective defence against the rebel advance. Only the Communists could obtain military aid from Russia, and only they possessed the professionalism and discipling to organize an army and pline to organize an army and suppress the social revolution. which alienated the middle classes and foreign democracies.

When this thesis is extended beyond the spring of 1937, several seams come under strain and the odd buttoo begins to pop. For example Prestoo's view — "it is difficult to deny the military achievements of the Communists" - cannot be maintained into that disastrous sequence of offensives, which eventually destroyed the Republic's capacity of resist. He describes the Brunete operation as "wellplanned" although it massed eight divisions with oo experience of manoeuvre oo a scorched plain; a perfect target for the Coodor Legion, which io two days destroyed threequarters of their armour. Walter Gregory does oot record the reaction of the British battalion's 42 survivors (out of 600) when Brigade Commissars claimed it as a victory. In a previous work Raymond Carr defined the problem succinctly: "The Popular Army, valliant in defence, had developed no capacity for a sustained offensive even when it enjoyed a crushing local superiority." Predictably, the Ebro operation of July 1938, the Reublic's greatest offen-sive, turned into its greatest disaster, virtually a self-inflicted coup de grace.

At first the idea was to take pressure off the Valencian front, yet a formight before the attack, the Nationalists had been fought to a stand-still in what was the Republic's most cost-effective battle of the war. (One cannot help wondering whether the absence of Com-The social democrat care mooist commanders had gory is the most strongly some effect on the way so little was heard of it however, thinks the Nationalists continued to advance, and that "by 23rd July Valencia was under threat". This is difficult to imagine since they would have had to have breached the line, and because the Nationalists had already transferred formations for Queipo de Llano's offensive on July 19th in the south.

Although Valencia was out of danger, the plan still went ahead. Negrin wanted a spectacular success to force Franco to oegotiate. His generals imagined they could retake the corridor between the two Republican zones. It was Walter Gregory and his comrades, Spaniard and foreigner alike, who paid for such self-the right time. Now that the miasma of outrage and rhetoric obscures South Africa, who better to penetrate it than a white Afrikaner? Especially an white Afrikaner? Especially an Afrikaner who realizes that, like the Château de Chillon or the Black Hole of Calentta, South Africa has become both "symbol" and "reality". "These two truths are intimately linked...and both can operate simultaneously." But Breyten Breytenbach is oo ordinary Afrikaner; he is a poet and paioter, who lived in France for many years; when he returned to his native country in 1975 he was arrested on various charges, includ-ing that of "terrorism". He was imprisoned for seven years, some of them io solitary confinement. On his release be returned to Paris, where he lives now.

It is not surprising, then, that End Papers should be a political book. It is essentially a collection of essays and lectures, most of them polemical or analytical in iotent. The general theme can be summa-rized thus: the white govern-ment of South Africa is determined to retain power, and it will do so through a potent combination of subterfuge and oppression. Breytenbach suspects that the country is rapidly turning into an autocracy on familiar Third World principles; and he also believes that there is a general strategy at work which is "a military one, with clear goals and a timetable."

Concessions may be made in the apparent dismantling of apartheid, but these will be merely camouflage; and, if South Africa represents Western culture or Western interests, it is only in the act of betraying them: "It is the cutting edge of oew realpolitik, expressed in the callousness to the Afrikaners are unfit to rule: "They cannot know the Africans. Not even themselves. How can the master ever understand the slave? Cootrol and repression are out tools of perception."

This is well expressed. But it is oo disparagement of his role as a radical Afrikaner to note that these attitudes are now commooplace: most of the essays in this collection could have been written by someone who had oever visited, let alone inhabited, the country in question. The fact is that few of Breytenbach's arguments seem animated hy his individual perceptions or by his unique experience; with the usual proportion of windy generalization and neo-Marxist rhetoric, they could have been composed by any other expressed in the callousness to radical of similar views. When hunger and poverty and he asserts that "Apartheid death." The real point is that destroys culture", he may be correct; but one wants to know why or how. Certaioly Breyteobach ought to know, but instead he presents a few truisms aboot state censor-and culture "will have to be revolutionary and socialist."

This is O level stuff. There seems to be no personal life working in the prose here.

It could be argued that this is mevitable: that, by their nature, theoretical essays are bound to be of an abstract and impersonal kind. But contemporary writers as disparate as Baldwin, Solzhenitsyn, and Eliot have written social or political commentaries in which the single most important element has been the stylistic imperative of their own obsessions. Their peculiarities are precisely what make them significant, oot some putative commoo ground on which all rightthinking people can stand. The commoo ground is for common writers.

And so how is one to account for the relative failure of Breytenbach's prose? The exilic lines: that, by leaving his country, he has left the best part of himself. Certainly he now seems to be intransigent-ly opposed to his inheritance "I doo't consider myself in Afrikaner," he writes, "am not particularly sure whether I'm South African." But the evidence of his two previous books, A Season in Paradise and The True Confessions of an Albino Terrorist, suggests that despite his exile he has remaioed an inventive and effective writer.

No, the problem with End Papers has less to do with his rejection of Afrikaner identity than the fact that he has remained so close to it: it has often been said that the rebellious soo is most like the father, and Breyteobach's revvery much like the illiberalism of the cooventional Afrikaner dressed up to another guise.

o his attacks upoo Western liberalism and the Western intellectual tra-- dition, for example, he seems uncaonily to have anticipated Pik Botha's recent speech about the "sickness" of the West. There is even a streak of viciousness (he talks of one Observer journalist's maggoty column") which may also be characteristic. The point is that the Afrikaners have a distinctive temperament - impassioned and sometimes distraught which informs Breytenbach's prose no less than it affects the attitudes of the South African government. He is a fully paid-up member of the tribe even as he decounces it. I suspect that Breytenbach recognizes this uncomfortable fact, which is why his words here are often so strident and over-emphatic.

Of course illiberalism and eveo viciousness can be important sources of a writer's strength; and Breytenbach is at his best when he is being most polemical: "Murder in the name of survival and murder in the name of the right to exist. In the laod where torturers get promotioo and the men of God pray down hate from the pulpit", and so on...this sounds like the authentic Afrikaner voice, from the pulpit or elsewhere. Nevertheless even these impassioned sentences represent a waste of Breytenbach's considerable gifts: he says at one point that the peculiar ambiguities of South Africa render it a fertile soil for Literature. That is precisely why he should leave polemic and propaganda (whether it is right" or "wrong" does oot really matter) to those who are iocapable of writing anything

Singing in the rigging

THE OXFORD BOOK OF SEA SONGS Edited by Roy Palmer Oxford, £9.95

Sea songs have always been one of the most vigorous branches of British folklore, as befits a maritime nation They represent and reflect the proper pride of the people in fighting and merchant fleets, with equally proper criticism of their conditions.

The tribulations of the ressed man and the qualms of the greenhorn "Ready to bring op guts and garbage" give place to the veteran's pride in victory or his bitter memories of defeat and shipwreck. Par-ticularly memorable are the songs involving survival by cannibalism.

We begin with the Hundred Years War and come up to the 1970s recession in the fishing fleets. Oral tradition, broadside, and some composed songs show all aspects of oaval history and naval life. We see as much of Jack ashore as afloat, at leisure as at work. There are rather few shanties. (A shanty is a merchant sailor's rhythmic v orksong devoted to a particular ship-board task; no other kind of song is properly so-called; shanty singing was never per-mitted in the Royal Nuvy.) Mr Palmer has gone far in search of material. Seventeenth-Century seamen's wivea defeud themselves against journalistic attacks on their morals. "A full description of the manner of the taking of Whales", full of technical details, has u fine bouncy tune.

Tunes have been supplied where known". In quite a few cases, though, tunes have been collated from other, often later, versions. In some like "The Dolphin's Return" the connection between text and tune seems tennous. Ia others, one knows that versions of the tunes are available, but none is mess.

The author is clearly partial. Yuppie Joho is an unpleasant character with a short temper and no imagination. His one-time friend, Phil, anti-nuclear protester and drop-out, is much more human and has all the best lices. The whole book is rich in humour, however, and Joho gets some rare sympathy wheo describing his lovely girl friend to Phil (with whom she is about to run

The author acknowledges his inspiratioo as Pushkin's Eugene Onegin. The book is an ambitious exercise and impressively well-executed. It is also a great pleasure to read. Impassioned io its light-handed support for the anti-nuclear lobby and touching io its plea for tolerance in Reagan's new society, it is an eccentric and charming song of the 1980s.

The social realism of The Widow Bird is more redoleot of the 1960s (as is that truly awful title). The jacket blurb itself calls attention to the novel's affinity with the early Margaret Drabble. This is a coofident first novel, however, which sets out to describe a womao rehuilding her life after the sudden death of her faithless and unloving husband. The early details of the book are very well managed. The funeral with the assembled family immediately suggests the perspective of ooe who is not truly involved in the grief and ritual of the occasioo. Clare, the widow, a lecturer at a small university, is playing the role assigned to her. And yet she is a widow in practice. in finance, a one-parent family. Her struggle to keep the truth about their marriage uppermost, resisting social pressure to grieve for something false, is the most successful aspect of the oovel.

Everyday eveots huild slowly to a reassembly of existeoce, illuminating the basic componems of domestic life. There is, however, an overload of melodrama that works less well. One event involves her daughter's meningitis. The harrowing detail of the child's condition and the mother's anguish is finely observed; but its effect and intention are lost

The poetry, which threads the myth's narrative through the book, has an austere beauty and a command of language that is absent from much of the prose. The book is in three sections, which take the reader through the yearly cycle from autumo to following autumn, and through death, birth, and rebirth on different actual and psychological levels.

The prose pieces, which have no real narrative connection, are often mooologues orconfused dialogues, with few clues giveo to character. Some recognized there would be important political gains for the administration if Mrs Thatcher could be persuaded to endorse it hut did not see why such endorse-

Despite the strong personal and political lioks that exist between President Reagan and Mrs Thatcher it has for a long time been hard to turn their relationship to Britain's commercial advantage. The purchase of Trident and the embarrassment over Ptarmigan, the British hid for the American battlefield radio contract, are classic recent cases. Trident is too expensive, say British critics. conditioned by the Foreign Office ethos to be suspicious of close personal relations between their political masters, failed to take account of the complexity of the Washington terrain. US defence analysts believe that if the British had negotiated more skilfully wheo Trident was bought, they could have got a much better deal. They also point out that when the dollar was high, the pound low and General Dynamics was in trouble over contracts with the Pentagoo, Britain should have tried to recegotiate. Hard to prove, hut both these contentions ring true.

The American battlefield radio contract presents a much clearer case. Mrs Thatcher was persuaded by her officials to write a personal letter to President Reagan urging him to accept the British bid. Those who persuaded her of this should have known how weak and hopeless a case she had. The British system was vastly more expensive than the French and was largely untried while the French was partly in service. Above all, the American system of arms purchase, overseen as it is by Congress, simply does not give the President the option to bully the Pentagon into accepting a politi-cally attractive but wildly uncompenitive offer.

Critics of SDL, both here and in America, will say that these contracts have taken an inordinate time coming and that they are mere tokens, given as an act of nolitical assistance to a friend in need. Administration officials disagree. They say that it is because both America and Britain want a lasting and fruitful relationship over SDI that it has taken some months to negotiate agreements that are certain to produce satisfactory technical results and likely to create a sympathetic atmosphere for subsequent nego-

It is a pity that at the signing in emphasized that, while Britain supported research on SDI, deployment would have to be occotiated with the Soviet Union. No doubt he was speaking to his domestic audience. As with his urging the administration to think again over its decision to abandon the Salt II limits, he showed again how little ministers and their officials understand the Americans. If SDI research is successful it is simply naive for anyone to believe that any American administratioo would be so irresponsible as not to deploy it in the absence of substantial and lasting arms focused on a prospect of turmoil and much bloodshed, efforts are usually made by politicians and in media comment to explore the historical realities underlying each side of the question in search of a workable solution. The case of the South African whites is a singular exception.

Reality obscured by emotion

A moral criterion has been established by which apartheid is so much a unique and peculiar evil that nobody of goodwill should see any possible relevance in contemplating the historical dilemma which underlies it. South Africa is presented as melodrama. The villains determined to maintain their racial supremacy are confronted by heroes struggling for freedom and with demands behind which the world must in the cry for sanctions, a quite exceptional moral bandwagon is rolling aboard which all decent people are expected to scramble. No dictatorship, however murder-ous or ville; has attracted such demands for hostile intervention. Moral fashioo requires the argu-ment to be simply about the immediate effects and effectiveness of sanctions, not about what ultimate outcome of the crisis makes sense in South Africa. Discussion of the fundamentals goes by default. All that is morally in order is pressure to force the whites to come to terms with the demands of the African National Congress for one man one vote in a unitary state. Every other concession in dismantling the apparatus of social apartheid is dismissed (even by Bishop Tutu) as too little too late, and as evidence that the pressure must be intensified. It is the classic pre-revolutionary situation in which concessions are taken as a sign of weakness and rejected so that hearts may be hardened and the struggle continued until total victory is achieved.

In Britain politicians argue about what impact sanctions will have on the South African government's policies, whether they will harm blacks (as Pretoria claims), whether ordinary blacks nevertheless want them, and whether they will cause unemployment in British export industries. Many share David Steel's view that although sanctions are largely

"gesture politics" which are unlikely to "bring the South African government down" they are still necessary as a signal to the African population that they are out tighting alone but have the democratic West behind them. If, it is said, sanctions are not applied so as to force the South African government quickly to accept the demands of the ANC, there will be even more bloodshed. But there is no less and probably more risk of bloodshed from the whites' present fear that the world offers them no other way out and from what could come about if a system of one man one vote in a unitary state came Instead of arguing about the immediate effects of sanctions we should be asking honestly what

Africa, and whether one man one vote in a unitary state is a viable democratic option.

It is fear of its consequences which largely explains, though it does not excuse, the immoral apparatus of social and political apparatus of the history of South Africa is unlike that of any other African country. Elsewhere the whites were tiny minorities whose power was not indefinitely sustainable. The question was never whether but when and in what conditions they should hand it over. Once they handed it over, however reluctantly, their num-bers were small enough for them to be accommodated in the new states or go elsewhere.

But the South African whites number more than 4.5 million, approaching 20 per cent of the population. They have roots there since the 17th and 18th centuries, and with the help of foreign investment they have built up an advanced western industrial sociality and their cultural advanced western industrial society which, with their cultural identity, they wish to preserve. Looking at the rest of Africa they do not think it would survive with the forms of democracy interpreted by an African majority. They know that a Bishop Muzorewa would quickly be brushed aside.

The norm of African democracies is the one-party state. We should not jeer at that. As a distinguished servant of the House of Commons once said to me:
"We export the Westminster model to Africa but in the conditions there it is not the 20th century model but the quasimonarchical and baronial version of the 13th century which takes root." That version is suitable at some stages in development, but hardly to South Africa. White resistance to it is the root of apartheid, from the concept of the homelands to social apartheid which is intended to prevent political advance. It is a harsh and immoral system which even in its own terms has been applied dishonestly. Separate development has been oothing of the sort since the growth of prosperity has owed much to the availability of low-paid black labour and to an unfair division of the country. But we have to deal with the fear at the root of these misdeeds if we wish to avoid bloodshed.

moved by their own resentment of colonialism, demand that Britain should impose sanctions. They are bad guides. We might tell them that for one thing colonialism has generally been a means to human advancement; the Romans were colonists and we ourselves were beneficiaries. Colonialism leaves problems but the struggle in South Africa is not strictly one of them. It is a struggle between the aspirations of different communities and a solution must be one which produces peace by satisfying them both. Britain's role is to urge a solution that will turn away a wrath which will only be dangerously intensified if all that is oo offer is sanctions and the ANC's present demands.

A party resolution published in 1981 blamed what it called a handful of bourgeois rightists whn, after the proclamation of the 100 Flowers, advocated "speaking out and air-ing views in a big way" in order to mnunt a wild attack against the party. The party, it said, was entirely correct to counter-attack.

The principal author of the 1981 resolution was Deng Xiaoping, who is oow calling on intellectuals for co-operation. But io 1957, when he was party general sec-retary under Mao, Deng told the central committee: "The majority of the rightists have been made to bow before the masses and admit their crimes . . . There must be a portion of the rightists who will not repent and they must bring their reactionary viewpoints with them to their graves."

In April of that year, to a closed conference, Mao issued his call for "blooming and cootending." But there was little response from the suspicious intelligentsia nntil oews began trickling into China of Khrushchev's denunciation of Stalin, and of the Hungarian uprising. THE UNCIVIL WARRIOR

Tensions are undoubtedly high in Northern Ireland. But what caused Dr Paisley's sudden conversion to the theory that civil war is round the corner, when he had been so relatively quiet on this - and on most other - subjects for the past few weeks?

The shortest answer is that the latest phase of the struggle for political leadership of unionism has still produced no conclusive winner. Ever since the Official Unionists and Dr Paisley's Democratic Unionists, began vying for dominance in the early 1970s, many of their tactics have been influenced not only by their traditional opponents but by consideration of the opponents on their own side.

The centre ground of unionism will always gravitate towards its traditional representatives, the Official Unionists. Dr Paisley has to find his ground on either the moderate or the extremist side of that obstacle. At any given moment, therefore, he can be found being either surprisingly free-thinking or else parading potential paramilitaries in preparation for band-to-hand

The speed and frequency of his journeys between these two poles has occasionally confused observers into thinking that Dr Paisley is moving of thumb in judging these volatile manoevres it is that if a piece of ground has Dr Paisley's feet on it, it is not in the centre of anything. Dr Paisley is now, as virtually always, testing the politi-cal temperature. Is there a constituency for violent resistance to Hillsborough or will dissent remain roostly peaceful? Unionism is again divided: many unionists were genuinely disgusted at the intimidation and thuggery triggered off by the staging of a one-day protest strike in March. But it is also a deepseated and widely-held belief in both communities that violence is the continuation of politics by other means, that communities engaged in selfdefence can licence themselves to resist or attack what they do not want irrespective of the views of the state in which they

In this culture, there is a marked shortage of voices to tell Dr Paisley what should be self-evident, that there can be no justification for the violence which be claims to foresee and in doing so helps to encourage. It is particularly ironic that Dr Paisley talked about a "battle" to preserve "our British heritage". It is not towards the more pragmatic part of our heritage to raise centre. If there is one safe rule arms against a democratic, arms against a democratic, elected government.

> Unionists such as Dr Paisley claim that the negotiation leading up to the Hillsborough agreement and the abolition of the local Assembly has deprived them of their vote and voice. Even if this claim is taken at its face value - and there is no reason to do so - it could never conceivably justify the civil war Dr Paisley appears to relish.

> It throws into sharp relief the old unionist dilemma of finding a measure of influence with the state to which they wish to be united. That influence has been eroded over the years by lack of political movement and a willingness to resort to violence or to threaten it. It is not likely to be restored by frontal assault on constitutional authority. In particular, it is not likely to be enhanced by violence against the police.

There was an appalling irony in the spectacle of Dr Paisley denouncing the unlucky policemen who had hauled him out of the Assembly chamber. Dr Paisley, the vocal scourge of terrorists, was busy wasting the precious time of those who manage the real business of dealing with terror-

FREE LIBRARIES

Little is sacred among our value-for-money principle and time-honoured institutions these days. If they have stood the test of time it often seems to be assumed that something must be wrong with them, But one institution has remained sacrosanct and apparently beyond censure: the public libraries. Founded in the middle of the last century, they are customarily extolled as open doors to literacy and literature and as making a little, or even a lot, of learning available to Everyman, if be wants it. They are seen as a means of transmitting our intellectual heritage from one generation to the next, and as justifying their cost by belping to build a basis for economic growth by giving access to the constantly enlarging flow of information.

Now, bowever, even the free public libraries have been subjected to attack in a provocative and highly illuminating report, Ex Libris. which has just been published by the Adam Smith Institute. Disrespectful it certainly is and it will undoubtedly arouse rage in the arts-and-culture establishment. But it is a healthy and reasoned critique and it deserves to be considered seriously.

From their beginning, public libraries have been funded by the rates, though before and after the first world war their expansion owed much to the private donations of the Carnegie Trust, which totalled some £1.8 million pounds. Until 1964 in England and Wales, and 1972 in Scotland it was purely a matter of local decision whether local authorities used their discretionary power to provide and fund library services. But since then they have bad a statutory duty to do so. The report calculates that the cost of the libraries through public funding is now £7 a head for every man, woman and child in Britain.

But the cost is not the sole charge directed against the principle of the free public library. The real criticism is based on what might be called on the consequences of the present system. It has, says the report, reduced book purchases and deprived authors and publishers of income to which they are entitled. The expansion of libraries into records, tapes and videos (for which charges are made) has provided unprecedented opportunities for illegal copying, again depriving creative artists of their due royalties. They have encouraged the opinion that books are free. and they have undercut and driven out of existence the private subscription and other the war. But the most telling charge against is that the greater number of customers use the service to borrow not educational books or literature but light romantic fiction: Mills and Boon on the rates. It is a good point and it raises the question wby not also libraries which commonly provided fiction cheaply before

subsidise romantic films? The best answer is that at a time when, despite the vast cost of education, literacy is at something of a discount in Britain, anything that promotes it in a society whose habit is to look more at moving pictures than the written page, is something to be preserved. Likewise the least convincing charge against libraries is that they are largely paid for by citizens who do not use them; on that basis every element of redistribution through taxation should be removed. The real question is whether the system with all its faults could be changed for the better and cheaper without harming the basic facility for self-education which it provides. The proposal in the report is that library members should pay an annual charge of £4 and a borrowing charge of 30 pence, which would enable more to be spent on the educational and reference services. Additionally, a separate charge of £I a day (surely for many people a really serious deterrent) is suggested for using reference and reading room facilities, with reduced rates for children, pensioners, the unemployed and students.

A charge of the latter sort is plainly unacceptable and would make nonsense of the educational purposes of public libraries which are especially important at a time when it is more and more important for citizens to have a return to education when they wish after school. The idea of charges in general carries the same disadvantage.

What would be more acceptable, if it could be devised, is a scheme for charges on pulp fiction leaving a free service for educational and literary books. But where would the line be drawn? How would one devise categories which would enable charges to be levied for Mills and Boon but not for Hamlet or Iris Murdocb? And where would Agatha Christie come into it?

It is a minefield through which few would care to tread, and in the absence of any convincing scheme for placing charges on a limited category of highly non-educational books it bas to be concluded that the report does not make its case for charges. Nor indeed do charges help to answer some of the most formidable aguments of the report, the use of libraries for censorship. It is common knowledge that politicised library committees comb the booksbelves to remove books that offend their particular notion of what they should contain, protecting children from anything they think savours of racism and sexism. Some even protect their ratepayers from reading The Times. But how would charges which simply kept more people out of the library stop that? It is a valuable and stimulating report which should make us think more about how libraries should be managed, what they should stock and who should manage them. But it does not lead convincingly to its authors' remedies.

THE WOMEN NOW WAITING Every little boy, or so we are is still regarded as the pinnacle

10ld. dreams of one day becoming a train driver. By the early 1980s 18.617 of those little boys had fulfilled their ambition. One of them had changed sex along the way. She is now the single fully qualified train driver on British Rail's

The paucity of women on the staff of Britain's railways has been evident to any rail traveller for decades. Two , years ago the Equal Opportunities Commission set out to discover the reasons. Its highly critical report, Wanted: Railman, published this week, revealed a catalogue of outdated and self-perpetuating attitudes which help to explain why so few women (a mere 6.5% of the British Rail employees) are involved in running the railways.

The train driver is one manifestation of these attitudes. Driving a train, despite technological improvements which have put an end to the heavy, sooty work of the past, of achievement on the railways. The job is steeped in tradition and not a little legend. And part of that legend is that train drivers need a certain special quality; they belong to an exclusive caste. Neither the qualities nor the caste include being a woman.

The most frequently offered excuses for the dearth of women employees are familiar. Railway work is heavy and dirty - but so is a great deal of work done by women and anyway it is less so than in the past. It involves unsocial bours and shift work; but so do many jobs, including the predominantly female nursing profession. The career progression, based as it is on long service and promotion through the ranks, does not fit a woman's life pattern. Does large organization?

What really disqualifies women are the prevailing attitudes to recruitment and staff training. Being a member of a

the promotion pattern of any

"railway family" may still be more important than qualifications for the job. Vacancies are often advertised by word of mouth - man to man,

There is precious little parttime working on the railways. even though the irregular flow of traffic should make the employment of part-timers advantageous. Overtime is the preferred norm - regardless of the number of people (both sexes) out of work. The Commission's analysis of opportunities for women in British Rail merits attention because it is equally applicable to almost every large nationalized industry. Railwaymen, as the report notes, see themselves and British Rail as part of the country's great industrial tradition, alongside steel and coal. Here is perhaps the most outdated attitude of them all, and the one which needs to be abandoned most rapidly if the railways are serious about looking to the future.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Avoiding battle in nation's church Limited choice

Ausin

Sir. In your leader (June 20). "The choice for the Church". you rightly point to the Church of England's dual role as the church of the nation and the church of committed Anglicans. I value both aspects and would deeply regret the demise of either. But theologi-cal decisions, whether about the nature of Christian belief or about the ordination of women, must be reached on a firmer basis than the religious impulse of popular senuiment. One is a Christian because one believes and not because being Church of England is an aspect of being a thoroughly decent Englishman.

This means that in coming to such decisions, majority opinion is not relevant in the way that it might be in, say, a referendum about membership of the Com-mon Market. Had Athanasius not stood alone (contra mundum), the Church might now have been Unitarian. A more recent example is the defeat of the Covenant proposals by a minority vote, as a result of which a newer and more exciting way towards a unity in diversity is coming to fruition and centuries of bitter division between Anglicans and Roman Catholics are being healed. Yet 10 the "church of the nation" opposition to those proposals seemed as bizarre as does the present opposition to the ordination of women - "ractics of bluff and bluster" as you yourself describe them, with an uncharacteristic lack of charity.

A recent BBC Newsnight poll suggested that no less than 18 per cent of members of the General Synod would not wish to be part of a Church of England with women priests. Projected on to total clergy numbers, that would mean a staggering 1,900 clergy who would be prepared to leave - nearly twice as many as the "bluffers and blusterers" have previously suggested and an average of some 45 priests per diocese. This number could well increase when it is more fully appreciated that the issue at stake is not simply the Ordination of women but, in its wake, the increasing dominance of liberal theology.

While it is true that the supporters of women in the priesthood have within their ranks the broad sweep of theological opinion, it is also within their number (and only there) that those are to be found whose liberal theology takes them beyond the bounds of what in the bishops' report, The Nature of Christian Belief, is described as the only belief which "can claim to be the teaching of the universal

Rather than "bluff and bluster", it is a simple fact that those who oppose the ordination of women will claim that because it is they

Men and manners

From Mr Lucas Mellinger Sir, I admit that Mr Bernard Levin's customary wit wrapped in verbal skills provoked my involuntary chuckles of which, on reflection, I felt much ashamed, as I think he ought to be.

He asks (June 19), "Who now is grinding down the poor?" and he implies that it is most of the unions, exemplified by one of their chairmen recently elected on the strength of: leaving school at 15; sticking to pints and meat pies (instead of restaurant food); declining a taxi to his botel in a downpour, and avoiding marriage with a woman of the professional classes. Mr Levin then ridicules their failure to aspire to his and no doubt, your readers' values.

However, elevated academic, culinary or sartorial refinements are not a prerequisite to the development of integrity. It is also

The hippy convoy From Mr Marcus Trinick

Sir, It is most interesting to note the various reactions there have been to what has been called "the hippy convoy" in the counties of Wiltshire, Somerset, Dorset, and Hampshire.

There is a children's nurser rhyme still in current use which runs: "Hark, hark the dogs do bank, the beggars are coming to 10wn . . . " This rhyme dates from the time of plague in the four-teenth and fifteenth centuries when there was a very real threat that travellers of no fixed abode would carry infection from one community to another.

Partly as a result of this fear, but partly also because boroughs obected to providing relief to those from elsewhere, the Elizabethan Poor Laws were enacted and provided that vagrants, as they were called, could only receive relief from and within their own place of origin. It was not until 1834 that the Poor Law Amendment Act was

Church of England. It is to avoid the unseemliness of a legal battle 10 determine who really is the Church of England, as well as 10 give the opportunity of two parallel churches undivided hy hitterness and recrimination becoming reconciled without diffi-culty and pain at a future date, that I shall propose such a course at the York Synod next month.

One thing is certain: the fun-damental differences which exist between liberals and traditionalists within the Church are wasting the energy and efforts of sincere people on both sides of the argument to such a degree that the real mission of the Church is being desperately undermined. We cannot go on in this way, and if a di-vision — albeit temporary — is the only way to avoid it, then perhaps such a course is actually the way God intends for us. Yours sincerely, GEORGE AUSTIN.

19 High Road, Bushey Heath, Warford, Hertfordshire. From Mr H. Hyslop Sir. You say in your first leader of June 20 that "Not to ordain women . . . would be to oppose the historic process of female emancipation and equality on the grounds that there are esoteric differences between men and women which Christianity alone knows about but cannot convinc-ingly explain". Is not this to attempt to solve a theological problem as though it were a purely secular one?

All Christians hold that divine revelation was addressed before Christ to the Jews. It has never been supposed that it was so addressed because there were esoteric differences between Jews and Gentiles which the human reason should be able to verify. The assumption bas always been that God favoured the Jews in his way because he freely elected to do so as he was fully entitled to do. But scripture and tradition combine to suggest that God has likewise freely elected, as he is equally entitled to do, to be served at the altar by males alone. What strictly theological reason exists for conlending that, on the point in question, scripture and tradition are misleading? It is this above all that needs to be explained.

In the absence of cultivated standards to be maintained pretence is the least civilised of attitudes and acceptance the most promising. This, I guess, was what the union members felt when they elected their chairman as "one of the lads".

Mr Levin's failure to understand this position would justify them - if they were interested on this occasion to call him an "arrogant prig".

the political level. So many British actions spring from the feeling, "If it's different it must be wrong" the result is a constant series of misunderstood reactions. On the European scene, it would help enormously if more British politicans understood our partners, if that were seen and felt to be so, with the result that our frequent need 10 disagree would no longer be regarded as springing from ignorance, lack of sympathy and simple arrogance.

passed to repeal in large measure those Elizabethan laws. Because I am not directly affected by the new Elizabethan travellers, and partly also because those like me who were teenagers between 1960 and 1970 may feel some sympathy by association, I do not feel able to have any firm views on the present problem, given especially that the "hippies" of 1986 do not accord with my memory of the hippies 20 years ago. However, I do wonder if, in the same way, that our inherited memory causes us to fear or to be wary of darkness, the present reaction to the hippy convoy may betray a degree of inherited mem-ory dating back to those days of plague so long ago.

It is not for nothing that children's nursery rhymes have survived so long. They strike a chord in our deepest conscious-of headstones

From Mr Clive Faruhar Sir. Bernard Levin (June 7) asks "Who ... commissions tombs loday?" The answer, I expect, is those who can afford line artists and workmen and can smooth over such local planning difficulties that arise.

The problem that many more of us face is the depth to which the art of the headstone has sunk. My wife and I recently had the sad opportunity of looking more closely into this area only to be appalled at the lack of choice and overall tastelessness that the high street monumental mason could provide. We were given the im-pression that the catalogue proffered was all we could expect.

Indeed, to look in any churchyard or cemetery it is easy to see how, over the last 50 years this dull and uninteresting conformity has been allowed to develop. Some blame must go to the local diocesan regulations and the excusable desire of the mourner to get the arrangements for the stone over and done with.

We spend much time improving our environment, both naturally and through the arts, and I believe that there is a responsibility for local councils and clergy to encourage higher standards.

In our own case we found an artist/craftsman whose experience, warmth and enthusiasm for the project took a great weight off our minds. His costs compared most favourably with those for the most basic stone offered by the monumental mason.

People may not have the re-sources for a Gilbertian tomb, but the fine arts of lettering, chasing and carving stone are still around and very underused. Yours faithfully, CLIVE FARAHAR,

Single European Act

From Mr Peter Giffard Sir, We ought to welcome the implementation of the Single European Act if it will ensure that the EEC Council of Ministers will reach speedier decisions. particular minority interest. We need to have earlier warning of the topics for decision and of the proposals for legislation.

And the Commission, having gathered greater power to itself, ought to have the courage to re-delegate to member states the detailed means of carrying Community policy into effect so that each member state can, wherever necessary, have due regard for its own national laws. The archive of The Times does not record if Mussolini's letter is not recura i mussount sietter is unique as one coming from a prime minister and having a polemical content. SIGNOR MUSSOLINI AND "THE TIMES."

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TIMES

Sir. - I am very sensible of the fact that your most important paper attentively follows my politi-cal and polemical manifestations. Allow me, however, to rectify some statements contained in your last ditorial.

It does not correspond with facts hat the last Bills voted by the Italian Chamber are against the most elementary liberties, whereof you will be convinced by carefully considering the articles of the aforesaid laws. It is not true that patriots are discontented. On the contrary, the truth is that the opposition is carried on by a small ispossessed group, while the enormous majority of the Italian people works and lives quietly, as foreign ers sojourning in my country may daily ascertain. Please note also that Fascism counts 3,000,000 adherents, whereof 2,000,000 are Syndicalist workmen and peasants, thus representing the politically organized majority of the nation. Even the Italian Opposilion now recognizes the great historical importance of the Fascist experiment, which has to be firmly continued in order not to fail in its task of morally and materially elevating the Italian people, and also in the interest of European civilization. Please accept my thanks and regards.

I am, &c., Rome, June 24. MUSSOLINI. Signor Mussolini's Apologia

We gladly lay before our readers the interesting letter which SI-GNOR MUSSOLINI has telegraphed to us for publication. A chief advantage of the liberty of the Press, as it exists under free and equal laws, is that it affords the representatives of all opinions the opportunity of stating their own case in their own words, subject only to the limits of moderation and of courtesy. Certainly nothing could be more temperate or polite than the substance and the tone of the ITALIAN PRIME MINISTER'S communication . . .

... All that he purports to do is rectify certain statements in a leading article which appeared in these columns last Tuesday. It is easy to weigh the value of these rectifications. He does not "conde scend upon particulars." He confines bimself to general assertions and general denials. SIGNOR MUSSOLINI says that the Bills just passed by the Chamber, in-cluding the Press Bill, the Civil Service Bill, and the Bill investing the Government decrees with the force of law, are not against the most elementary of liberties. That contention may be left to the common sense of the public. The closing sittings of the Chamber and his address to the Fascist Congres were the occasion of an article to which SIGNOR MUSSOLINI takes exception. The number of a leading Italian newspaper of very moderate Liberal views which reported the address was sup pressed in one edition for com menting upon the sittings. The 'Duce's" boast that Fascismo has 3,000,000 supporters who repre-sent the "political organized majority of the nation" may be eferred to the same tribunal. The nation numbers 40,000,000 Italians. What right have these 3,000,000 — if, indeed, there are 3,000,000 Fascists — to represent them? SIGNOR MUSSOLINI says quite truly that the enormous majority of the people are working and living quietly, and he denies that patriots are discontented. If the discontented are but "a small group", why is it necessary to gag the Press, to forbid free speech, to forbid public meetings, and to arm the Executive with arbitrary and practically irresponsible powers? SIGNOR MUSSOLINI declares that the movement must be "firm-ly continued" for the moral and material elevation of the Italian people and in the interest of European civilization. There is difficulty in seeing how it can benefit either. We believe that SIGNOR MUSSOLINI sincerely and earnestly desires the welfare of Italy. We are convinced that this policy is not in the long run the way to promote it.

A SPECIAL REPORT ON CRANFIELD INSTITUTE OF TECHNOLOGY

June 26, 1986 By Michael Hatfield

Flying through the frontiers of knowledge

versary this year, fortified by an admixture of enterprise, innovation and adrenalin. It is no ivory tower, but an entrepreneurial powerhouse, sitting midway between the new town of Milton Keynes and the old town of Bedford.

Apart from some of the buildings, there is nothing old about Cranfield. It lives on the frontiers of technological and scientific knowledge and its ethos is to push them further and wider. Its inhabitants the staff and students - and visitors are sucked into a vortex of enthusiasm which, if transported into industry as a whole, would transform the nation's living standards.

There are colleges for aeronautics and aerospace and for manufacturing, schools of management, mechanical engineering, policy studies and industrial science, departments of applied computing and mathematics and, the latest addition, an institute for information technology.

The latter - the marrying of software engineering, communication, computer-aided de-sign, intelligent knowledge-based systems and advanced micro-electronics - is a field in which Britain has been left trailing, Twenty-five leading UK companies have invested more than £3.5 million in the institute to help us to catch up, the near equivalent of finding a squad of English batsmeo to stand up to West Indiao

These are but a few of the disciplines covered on the ranfield College of institute has two other campuses—it won the Ministry of brates its 40th annipetition from Southampton and Loughborough Universities to run the Royal College of Military Science at Shrivenham, Wiltshire, and at Silsoe in Bedfordshire there is the Faculty of Agricultural Engineering, Food Production and Rural Land.

Soon, within the year, there will be a fourth campus at Milton Keynes, for the Information Technology Institute. Cranfield, the country's nearest, if faint, equivalent of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, is a unique profit-making corporation. With only 17 per cent of its revenue coming from Department of Education grants, it has to live in the market-place - from its husiness-applied education, contract research from indus-try and spin-off profit-making developments.

UK companies have invested more than £3.5m

Sir Henry Chilver, Cranfield's elegant vice-chancellor, believes in giving the various centres an independence and freedom to develop, but they also have to make money. On the one hand they have ao academic luxury, but on the other there is the responsibility to survive in the fiercely competitive and ever-changing world of technological development.

incidence of colleagues having heart attacks. But they will also relate how people stay for either a year or for life. Undeniably, Cranfield has an attractive environment. The campus is graced with winding roads and lawns dotted with trees; there is a tennis court and a sports field.

There is never a shortage of students. More than 9,000 attended degree and continuing study courses this year and five years ago there were more than 6,000. In 1985 more than 4,000 students applied for degree courses and less than 25 per cent could be accepted.

But Cranfield, unable to survive and prosper on De-partment of Education grants and student fees alone, has to live, as Sir Henry describes it, at the "coalface" of industrial and technological development. There are sessions to spot the worldwide strategic areas of growth so that Cranfield not only can get a slice of the action in the way of winning contracts for research projects, but also can be called in for its expertise. For the past five years the Flight Systems and Development Laboratories of the College of Aeronautics have been working successfully with Lo-tus on "active suspension" for formula one racing cars. Too expensive as yet to go into mass-production, it allows the car to "float" round corners at high speeds.

The School of Industrial Science, with its multi-disciplines ranging from metallurgical engineering to marine technology, have a team carrying out research to spot when Some of the staff will talk an oil rig develops a gammy Cranfield campus, but the sotto voce of the relatively high leg. It is ideas of this kind hundreds of them, covering the spectrum of technology that bring in the money. Sir Henry expects his 200 academic staff not only to teach and undertake research, but also to explore those strategic areas of growth for new business.

"With the institute's turnover of £50 million a year, that means they are geocrating wealth at £250,000 a bead," says Sir Henry. There can be little room for lame ducks, a thought which may have political-economic overtones, but neither Sir Henry nor the cranfield

Not all the schemes whether in meeting the educa-tional needs of students, all of whom are postgraduates, initiating new courses, or carrying out research projects - can be profit-making successes. One senior academic conjured up the analogy of a box of fireworks.

"You light one rocket and probably nothing happens; a second may travel 15ft; and a third may really take off and illuminate the sky. But each time you have to stand back to see what happens," he said. and added: "Remember, you are doing it in the dark."

The institute's policy is to place emphasis on advanced research work and the teaching that flows from it. The goal, says Sir Henry, is not just to be a large teaching machine.

"The focus", he says. "is based on the philosophy than the crucial quality of universi-ties is the generation of ideas. many of which have surprisingly wide application, hut which often spring from relatively small-scale activity. Large teaching organizations play an important role in the dissemination of these ideas. but they are rarely major generators of ideas generators of

Cranfield's ability to attract

As for the Cranfield of the future he sees it as becoming a powerful British institution. soon to match international institutions such as MIT and Georgia Tech.

Cranfield Institute of Technology is unique among British universities. It is unique because it specialises in advanced teaching and applied research in eogioeering, technology, management and public policy. It is unique in that the majority of its courses are at postgraduate level and are frequently aimed at the maturer student. It is unique in that it is the largest centre for applied research, development and design for industry, commerce, defence and public services within Western Europe.

The development of Cranfield Institute of Technology from its inception as the College of Aeronautics in 1946, through to the granting of a Royal Charter in 1969, the inclusion of Silsoe College and, more recently, the Royal Military College of Science as Faculties of the Insititute, reflect the growing importance and widening scope of the work of the Institute, and its leadership in the increased collaboration between academia and industry

The Institute currently operates on three campuses at Cranfield, Silsoe and Shrivenham. On each campus, applied research, postgraduate and post experience teaching are a feature of the work of every Cranfield School. There is constant interplay between these activities which fuels the unique synergy that has underpinned Cranfield's achievements over the last forty years.

Like the growth of energy resources, the school has expanded rapidly during the past lecade, li embraces a wide ange of research and academic courses to meet the growing needs of industry, defence and the technical branches of the public services

"We provide a unique mix of theory and practice", says Professor R.B. Fletcher, head of the school. Its programme of contract research, at more than £13 million, is the largest of any British oniversity.

There are a score of disciplines, from thermal power to energy conservation, from automotive product engineering to the development of turbo technology. Its full-time students taking MSc and PhD courses are more than 200, with a total staff complement of 100 academic, professional esearch, technical and academic support staff.

a controversial report, mainly on the grounds that they should be privatized, the Cranfield School of Managei ment one of the largest in Europe, escaped the anvil.
Given the profit-making athos of the institute, the expanding School of Maoage-ment had a turnover of £4.5 paillion last year. The school offers courses in all aspects of managerial skills. Almost 20 per cent of those in the UK who received a Master of Business Administration degree last year, graduated from Cranfield.

But the school's own business does oot end there. There cisely that. are 2000 managers every year who are sponsored by their companies to attend general management, programmes, specialist short courses and tailor-made in-company

A profit-making ethos that pays

There seems little doubt that the school has an involvement with industry and commerce that few of its competitors can match. It is an involvement tied io with the school's "incompany" service. The group undertakes extensive management development training with companies to help them overcome organizational and

Sponsors that make all the difference

The largest concentration in Britain of post-graduate teaching and research in manufacturing (65 per cent) can be found at Cranfield. In a modern block alongside the institute's airfield is the recently created College of Manufacturing, handling 200 postgraduates and 600 people from industry on short courses every year.

With its staff of 80, the college has a multi-million pound sponsored research programme — total turnover is £3.5 million with last year's earnings from industry at £500,000 — on the leading edge of manufacturing technologies.

Created more than a year ago not of the merger of two ather Cranfield schools, the college has led in the field in introducing new MSc courses such as applied robotics, manufacturing systems engineering, and flexible manufacturing systems, and developing the EITB fellowship scheme in manufacturing provide a balance and complementary portfulio covering the wide range of manufacturing engineering, from initial conceptual design, through detailed design to manufacturing processes, to the design and simulating of complete manufacturing systems. The school makes no pretence that a single course could be expected to cover adequately this wide range of topics. However, its courses are structured around the belief that postgraduate engineers should have a broad awareoess of the disciplines in the range, in addition to having a much deeper working knowledge and experience of their nwn specialist subject.

As an essential part of its entirely practical training, the college runs major group nr team projects sponsored by leading companies. They are projects that provide substantial help in advanced manufacturing and design to the sponsors, and at modest cost.

Students, in the words of Professor

Jack Dinsdale, are "given the ball and they have to run with it." Few fail to get over the line. Many of the projects have resulted in "world-first" innovations and developments.

Each team of students, under the overall direction of a staff supervisor, is given responsibility for the creation of a new machine system in response to a sponsor's specification. Not only do the students design, manufacture, test and develop their prototype machine, but they also bear the brunt of the project's administration.

Projects have included a machine for saving time and money for the furtrading company, Hudsons Bay and Annings, which automatically picks out the various colour shades of pelts and sorts them.

Company sponsors include IBM, Hewlett-Packard, Texas Instruments, British United Show Manufacturing, Metal Box and Crosfield Electronics.

Pioneers on the hi-tech front

A new institute for advanced teaching and research in com-puter-integrated maoufacturing, backed by industry to the tune of £3.5 million, is being established at Cranfield next year. Its aim: to become the focal point of CIM in the United Kingdom.

Computer-integrated man-ufacturing means the total automation of all manufacturing processes, from the acquisition of raw material through to the finished product. Equally, it is coocerned with the integration of manufacture and with design and innova-tion through CAD-CAM technologies.
CIM includes both tactical and strategic management control, as well as product development, marketing data management ioformatioo. Thriving on the frootiers of scientific and technological knowledge, as Cranfield does, the objective of the CIM institute is to ensure that manufacturing companies in-troduce effective computer-integrated manufacturing as rapidly as possible.

IBM is co-operating strongly with Cranfield in the developmeot of the CIM institute. Support from the IBM Trust is likely to exceed £2.5 million. The Ford Motor Company has covenanted £250,000 over five years to support a leading professorship in manufactur-ing quality within the computer-integrated environment.

With a planned staff of about 50, the institute aims to provide an appropriate basic teaching io CIM for universities, polytechnics and colleges. particularly the teaching staff n CIM technology. As well as the full-time permanent teaching, research programming and support staff, the institute will invite experts in CIM from IBM and other companies and universitites to contribute to the teaching. research and development.

Housed within the two-storey hulding will be a wide range of leading-edge computer technologies. They will include colour-graphics simu-lation, three-dimensional colour solid modelling CAD-CAM, expert systems for manufacturing decision mak-

Designed to have national and international impact on the development of CIM techoology, the institute's primary thrusts will be in three key

 Broadly based training for senior personoel in manufacturing industry, whose companies are determined to lead to the appraisal, development and implementation of CIM; Research and dvelopment of CIM through the longerterm CIM institute Fellows' Programmes, These will estab-lish CIM development and implementations through the Cranfield system of industrial group projects sponsored by leading companies. It sees as its purpose the creaoon of the means for manufacturing companies to maximize their corporate objectives, including return on total investment, using the most comprehensive, flexible and iostantaneous computing technology.

For Cranfield, with its unique relations with manufacturing industry in the UK and abroad, the new iostitute is seen as another leap along the frontiers of scieoce and technology.

It's vital that, as a leading aerospace and medical systems company, we remain at the forefront of new technologies and new ideas.

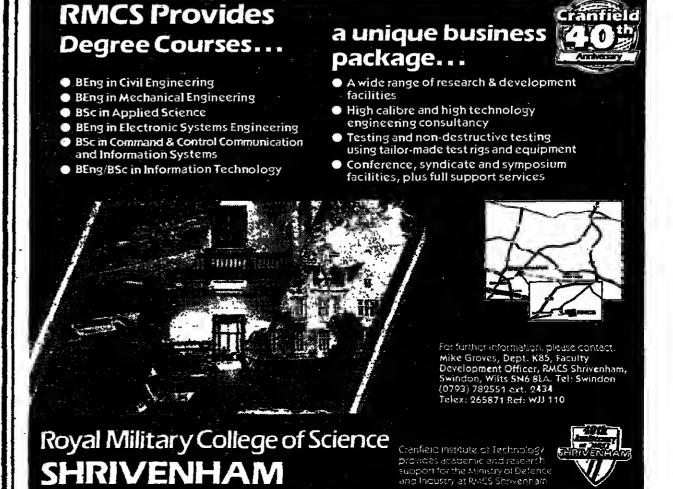

That's why we regard our links with Cranfield as so important. Here as elsewhere is living proof that the gap between education and industry has been successfully bridged, for the good of all.

We've put together an unmatched educational opportunity.

The Army has an increasing need for Officers with science and engineering qualifications.

If you are studying 'O' levels and are wondering what to do with your life you owe it to yourself to consider what we offer.

Even if you're sure you're going to make a career in industry, time spent with us could accelerate your progress when you do.

Science'A' levels at Welbeck.

If you expect to get high grades in Maths and Science 'O' levels and you have the qualities required of an Officer, you may win a place at Welbeck, our residential Sixth Form College for boys.

The atmosphere is that of an up-to-date progressive boarding school.

redicion Control of the control of t

Academic standards are high, in fact on average two thirds of our students go on to take university degrees, either before or after Sandhurst. At the same time great emphasis is placed on all round development and character building.

There is no more military training than at many other boarding schools (about 4 hours a week with the Combined Cadet Force).

There are facilities for most sports and adventure training.

Our students come from every type of school and family background.

We will be happy to arrange for potential students and their parents to visit Welbeck and to see the College and its beautiful surroundings first hand.

Sandhurst will make a man of you.

The Welbeck curriculum is designed to prepare you for your seven months at Sandhurst where you'll learn what being an Officer is all about and a good deal more.

We'll test your courage, your stamina and your initiative.

We'll give you confidence in yourself and your ability as a leader.

We'll train you to manage and to take responsibility for others.

We'll push you to your limit. You'll emerge knowing how to lead men, how to keep them fit and eager in peace, how to lead them in action and how to look after them at all times.

Sandhurst is a prelude to a specialised Young Officers Course. During this period the things you've learnt are applied to your own particular arm or service. You will gain an enhanced ability to command your own platoon or troop of highly trained soldiers.

In short, before your twenty-first birthday you'll have had a course in man-management and have assumed a level of responsibility that probably wouldn't come your way in industry until your mid-thirties.

A degree at Shrivenham.

At Shrivenham you would read for a BSc or BEng in Applied Science, Civil, Mechanical, Aeronautical or Electrical Engineering, Communications and Information Systems or Information Technology.

These degrees are recognised by major professional institutions and accepted by industry.

Apart from strictly military science for which Shrivenham is uniquely well equipped and staffed, the College has a nuclear accelerator and other 'state of the art' equipment that is the envy of civilian universities.

Each student is obliged to complete a research project as part of his course. Sometimes this leads to valuable discoveries which are taken up by industry.

Not all Welbexians go to Shrivenham, some go to civilian universities.

The student body at Shrivenham comes from a variety of backgrounds: civilian life, the Royal Navy, Royal Air Force, Civil Service, the Women's Services and from serving Army Officers.

Graduates can take second degrees, and there are also numerous specialist options to choose from.

Later in their careers technical and scientific courses are available to students going to Staff College.

Shrivenham is a big, busy growing college in pursuit of excellence in everything it does.

You may of course apply direct for Sandhurst, but if you can obtain a place at Welbeck and follow through with Sandhurst and Shrivenham you'll receive an education second to none.

Possibly after Sandhurst you may decide you've had enough studying and want to get on with your job as an officer rather than trying for a degree course.

Many jobs in the Army don't require graduates to do them and you can have a very successful career without getting a degree, but science and technology are becoming much more important and as we said we need more qualified people.

If you want to know more, write to Major John Floyd, Dept L601, Army Officer Entry, Empress State Building, Lillie Road, London SW6 1TR.

Tell him your date of birth, place of study and the qualifications you are working towards.

You don't have to be big to get the know-how

In its School of Iodustrial Science, the Cramfield Insti-tute of Technology has a remarkable combination of high technology equipment and a team of scientists and technologists with expertize in solving problems related di-rectly to industry. It is a unique centre for postgraduate training and cootract research, and spans a vast oumber of

Its services are available to any firm, with the obvious proviso that the particular problem can be attacked prop-erly within one of the seven main departments into which the school is organized. But that provides a large umbrella

There are departments dedeated to innovation in wellestablished areas like engineering metallurgy and welding, and joining. Then there are laboratory test-beds and specialists in younger science-based industries, such as molecular electronics and polymer engineering. In a similar vein, departments specialize in marine technolgy, industry and in development agencies. Technicians have been perfected for monitoring the behaviour various structures to be used off-shore.

Other special facilities for research into energy coover-sion processes like coal gasification allows for the environmental impact of novel technologies. There are few places where this type of detailed study can be done.

The school evolved io its present form to meet a particular emphasis that Cranfield adopted toward training and research linked with the industrial application of science. It was to ensure that those activities were oot just more closely connected with current innovation, but they were a direct stimulus for development.

Professor Peter Hancock, the head of the school, stresses a philosophy of "working with pariners" rather than "for them." If he has a disappointment it is io the relatively small number of medium size firms which exploit the school's resources

He says it is stimulating and rewarding to work on pro-grammes with hig companies like GEC-Marconi, ICI or Shell, who are among the leaders in technological development. But he adds, "ideally we would like to be the catalyst for more medium-size ones. They could probably benefit more in proportion to the scale of the work."

Professor Hancock says that one remarkable aspect of this centre of industrial science is its ability to absorb a mixture of short, medium and long term work. Whereas six month or twelve month studies, involving a young re-search in higher degree work, is typical of one type of work, a short but highly technical investigation for an iodustrialist may take a matter of days. There can be as many as 150 individuals on PhD and MSc type of industrial — related research programmes at one

At the other extreme, programmes of basic science ioto the properties of materials and processes have natural timescales over several years, which relates to the pace of innovatioo. fo the short-term, work repeated experience shows the handicap facing many smaller firms. Too few have technically qualified people to call on at senior management level. So they either lack the expertize to understand the scope of the resources and taleot that a centre like Cranfield can put at its disposal, or there is often a communication gap between managers and technologists, which does not arise in the big

The disadvantage of the results in a company chasing the wroog problem. Again, quality problem in manufac-turing is frequently attributed to poor materials. But when the matter is thoroughly test-ed, it is not often a question of specifying new materials. The issue is best settled in redesign.

On another part of the campus, new industries are already being born from pio-neering at the Cranfield Bio-technology Centre. The group has already established an international reputation in, among other developments, advances in biosensors.

In such a dynamic field, the biotechnology group is reck-oned to be the fastest growing and largest of the recently established centres.

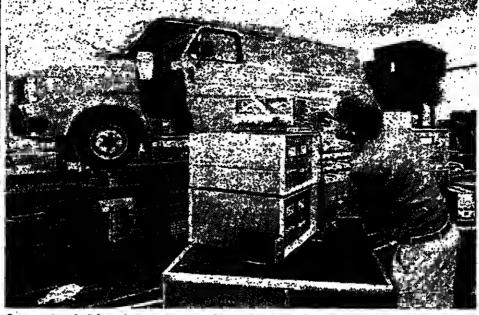

A team of 70 work at Cranfield with the director Professor Joho Higgins. But they collaborate with a team of 40 at the Leicester Biocentre of Leicester University, to form what is believed to be the largest university biotechnology group in the UK. The major source of funding is from industry and the research and PhD programmes are directly related industrial needs.

But the most fascinating initiative at Cranfield must be the loternational Eco-Technology Centre. It was established under a donation from the Honda Foundation for international research in sci-ences and technologies which can contribute to the wellbeing of this and future generations and their environment

As it blossoms from its embryo stage, the centre will build the interdisciplinary teams needed to explore the frontiers of molecular biology and genetic engioeering. Also to develop novel materials through new processes and to investigate possible new methods of communication.

The last topic will have a practical implication "at home," because the intention is to force links with Japanese and European research

The Royal College of Military Science can be found in a parkland estate between Oxford and Swindon. It has been there for 40 years, but it was nuly two years ago that Cranfield won the Ministry of Defence contract for the academic teaching and research facilities on what is now called the Shrivenham campus. It comprises the Cranfield Faculty of Military Science Technology and Management and is led by the Principal and Dean, Professor Frank Hartley.

The civilian teaching staff provide the instruction in scientific and technological matters, and the Army directs staff lectures on the nature of the threat which it is the job of the Students are drawn from many countries, many of whom are planning a military career, but there are others who are aiming at civilian careers in order to prevent the college becoming a purely introspective organization

It provides an extensive teaching programme aimed at undergraduates (BSc) and postgraduates (MSc, DPhil and PhD), as well as staff ufficer and specialist courses covering the entire spectrum of defence engineering and management.

The Royal Ordnance Factories have established an operational analysis and systems assessment unit at Shrivenham, typifying the industry-academia interface which is the hallmark of the Cranfield campus.

Farming with the aid of statistics from the sky

When agricultural engineers and tractor dealers petitioned successfully 25 years ago for a college to help to meet the needs of world agriculture, the possibility of them extracting some of the vital data from a satellite orbiting the globe was little more than a dream.

Now it is a reality. Geosta-tionary and orbital satellites provide a virtually unlimited data source oo the natural resources of the earth and much of that data is analysed by Silsoe College, Cranfield's Faculty of Agricultural Engi-neering, Food Production and Rural Land.

information technology (IT) where all aspects of the subject will be taught with the most modern equipment," claims Sir Henry Chilver, the vice-chaocellor and spearhead of the drive to create a novel academy specializing in IT.

The new institute of informatioo Technology, with an initial funding of £4 millioo and 25 industrial sponsors, will make academic history this autumn when it opens its doors for the first time.

foformation technology is the marriage of telecommunications and computer sciences and their related applications -and it needs to be taught in a new way. It is this concept which is behind the IT institute. Initially, the institute will be accommodated to Bletchley Park, Milton Keynes, before a new tailormade space age building is

The institute has gained political momentum during the past two years in the wake of government reports which highlighted the crisis facing Britain in skills shortages

More engineering graduates in 1T skills are needed to ensure that Britain matches the industrial manufacturing performance of its major industrial competitors, particularly West Germany, France, the US and Japan.

Technical graduates who have been taught the skills of managing both IT equipment and people are in short supply.

The gap is stark in the IT sector which is expected to have a trade deficit of £9,000 million hy the early 1990s. The Institute of Informatioo Technology at Cranfield is an attempt to stop the rot. Sir Henry's energy and the crisis atmosphere generated in the wake of numerous scare reports focusing on skills shortages have been the catalysis needed to launch the novel project.

But Sir Henry is aware that new approach to educatino is needed. Industry not unly requires a new type of gradu-ate whose education has been tailored to its needs, but an

The military link-up

One of the basic reasons for establishing an Institute of Information Technology is the creation of a college where students can train with the proper equipment.

A new centre called the IT centre has been established marrying the resources of Cranfield Institute of Technology with those of Shrivenham, the Royal Military College of Science, which has an established reputation as a centre for education and research in defence technology.

The college is equipped to offer postgraduate courses in applied science, engineering, management and military technology, and a range of short courses to civilian as well as military students. In recent years it has attracted students from more than 40 countries.

The Information Technology Centre pools the resources of both the Cranfield and Shrivenham campuses, allowing the centre to cater for 150 undergraduate and 150 postgraduate students. It also runs short courses that are attended by 1,500 students each year.

OBITUARY SIR MOSES FINLEY Radical approach to Ancient History Sir Moses Finley, FBA, who died on June 23 at the age of 72, had been Master of Darwin College, Cambridge, from 1976 to 1982, and Professor of Ancient History in the University from 1970 to 1979. Few ancient historians have made as large an impact on the historical world in general, and Finley was at his best as a source of inspiration and friendly advice to able students and young academics in this country and abroad.

Born in the United States on May 20, 1912, be graduated BA at Syracuse University when only 15 and MA at Columbia University two-years later, his principle subjects were then psychology and American Constitutional Law Fired by W. L. Westermann while financing himself from his own earnings and those of his wife, Mary Thiers, a school teacher whom he married in 1932 and who remained to the end his close companion and staunch support. Her death occurred only the day before his own.

After graduating, he took up a research post with the Encyclopaedia of the Social Sciences (1930-33), was a research assistant to the Roman lawyer A. A. Schiller at Co-lumbia University (1933-34), held a research fellowship in history at the same university (1934-35), and a part time teaching position in history at the City College of New York (1934-42). In this period he came under the influence of the expatriate Frankfurt Institute for Social Research, associated with Columbia University from 1934.

He participated in its seminars, reviewed books for its journal and was employed as translator. His radical instincts, encouraged by contact with Max Horkheimer and Herbert Marcuse among others, and his reading in social history and social theory, led to activity on behalf of the Republicans in the Spanish Civil War, and to fund raising. for Russian war relief during the Second World-War. Although after the war he preferred an academic life and was lecturer and later assistant professor at Rutgers University from 1948-52, these diverse activities had left a permanent intpress.

Among ancient historians of his time, his familiarity at once with law, economics and sociology, was unparalleled, and was deployed to cast new (Arnaldo Momigliano).

of St Etienne-du-Mont, and in that year his Prélude, adagio et choral varie sur le Veni Creator won him a prize from the Amis de l'Orgue. Trois Danses (1932) and an organ suite (1933) further enhanced his reputation, and in 1936 he received the Blumenuthal Foundation Prize.

uon of Czechoslovak and foreign film-makers in the "new wave" style of the 1960s, including Forman who went on to win Oscars for his films One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest and Amadeus. -

His numerous books of which the most influential are perhaps The Ancient Greeks (1963). Early Greece The Bronze and Archaic Ages (1970). Froley was uncless in leaveing and reviewing with the object of making classical, and especially Greek, antiquity bener understood by the general public.

It was characteristic that he devoted much energy to great effect to improving the teaching of ancient history in our schools.

He was, however, no ordenary populariser, content to disseminate received views. Even his most trifling pieces had the stamp of an original and powerful mind with fresh insight to convey.

His last book, Ancient History: Evidence and Models (1985), in which his historiographical skills are on display, is an uncompromising denunciation of much contemporary ancient history writing for its refusal to come to terms with the limitations of the evidence.

All this, and the great breadth of his knowledge and interests, which took in art, literature and religion, as well as political, economic and social institutions, make his works of high importance for the professional scholar.

Finley was a great lectuser and teacher. Within Cambridge, he revived ancient history and brought it into repute among professional historians and students alike. As Master of Darwin, his priorities were to raise the academic stature of the college, broaden the educational interests of its graduate and senior members, and create a congenial atmosphere conducive to academie intercourse. The immensely successful centenary conference of which the proceedings were published as Evolution from Molecules to Men in 1983.

His death cut short a return to Greek law, a further statement on slavery, perhaps his most abiding interest, and an ambitious project on the so-cial history of antiquity.

prompts some memories of a brave and fascinating man. He was both a man of action and an energetic scholar. As an officer in the Royal Marmes he was severely wounded m the raid on Tobruk in 1942 and then interned in Italy.

Having escaped at the time of the Allied advance in 1943-44, he was wounded again on the Normandy beaches on D-Day, an event followed by another long spell in hospital

Having finally recovered enough to pursue a peacetime career with the British Council, he took advantage of residence abroad to study aspects of the arts which interested him.

He also had published books on Fuscii, Austrian Baroque architecture and the Vienna Secession, including the work of the painter, Klimt Despite continual pain and disabilities arising from his war wounds he retained enormous gusto and a sense of fun which will be greatly missed.

Mock gravity theory for universe By Pearce Wright, Science Editor

In the very early stages of the radiation pressures, leading to development of the universe, the clustering of matter into the force that pulled matter together to form star systems in the pregalactic period was "mock gravity", according to a theory put forward by two galaxy formation, the prelimination of the light property of the prelimination of the light property of the prelimination of the light property of the prelimination of the universe, the clustering of matter into the clustering of matter into the clustering of matter into spinning galaxies.

Dr. Hogan said that although the universe, the clustering of matter into spinning galaxies.

nary calculations were surpris-ingly consistent. Moreover, no one had found a clear way to rule out mock gravity as the key mechanism for galaxy formation.

Explanations for the irregular but highly organized arrangement of galaxies have cilled on phenomenon like "galactic wrinkles", or fluctuations early in the bow wave of gas and particles from the big bang, to account for the present shape of the universe. Another theory is that over a period of time the very early aniverse was punctuated in the

They suggest a small vacu-um chamber, with some dust particles and some illumination. To eliminate the effects of gravity, the apparates would have to be dropped. Dr Hogan estimates that a second or so would be long enough. But the theory makes specific predictions about the arrangement of matter and energy in the universe. Some have been borne out by observation

For example, they predict a strong background of cosmic infra-red radiation, and they suggest that that could be observed by the Cosmic Background Explorer Satellite, which is scheduled to detect the faint legacy of the big hang at the end of the decade. Nature: Vol 321. pp 575-578.

perfect opportunity to cele-brate the joys of tranquil domesticity before the irruption of global mayhem and work-weary fathers. Whose Baby? (Thames) is the paradigm of the form.

Hosted with excruciating onhomic by the avancular Bernie Winters, the show consists simply of a three-man panel "quizzing kiddies" about their parentage. The very youngest kiddies often have less than volumes to say on the subject as they perch bemusedly on Mr Winters's kindly knee; any young lady under the age of 10 is lavishly complimented on her dresssense; from time to time the terpid studio. St Bernard, Schnorbitz, earns his biscuits by contributing an extravagant

Yesterday's series-opene had Ted Rogers, John Inman and Nanette Newman ("s wonderful mum herself") striving valiantly to guess the identity of Yuri Geller's tiny tots, Henry Cooper's younger son, Mike Winters's granddaughter and (a wild card, this) Samantha Fox's mother. Miss Fox berself, who turned out not to be famous as an iceskater, emerged to acknowl-edge her public's acclaim and crack a joke about growing up to be a nig girl.

The fifth part of The Africans (BBC1) provided alto-gether more sober fare, as Ali A. Mazrui took his eclectic wardrobe and laboured journalese on a tour of the continent's more recent trouble-spots. Since trouble and Africa have been more or less synonymous, from Algiers to Johannesburg, this was a tall order to fill, and - as with the rest of the series to date there was not much to distinguisb this outing from the kind of treatment offered by the Open University.

The Opera Theatre of Saint Louis has a reputation for careful production and an atmosphere that brings the best out of young singers: as the man who made that

Serious comedy and frothy farce

After 10 years Opera Theatre Saint Louis has lost its prime mover, Richard Gaddes, but not the welcoming ambience that cheers fine performances from rising young singers, or the sense of care and responsibility in the productions. No doubt the hit of the present season will be counted to be the American première of Rossini's Journey to Rheims, pro-duced by Colin Graham in a manner at once ehullient and affectionate, and thrown off in fine style by a lively cast. But equally distinguished was the sober, luminous and illuminating production of Die Entfihrung by Graham Vick: it is good to know this will be repeated by Opera North next

Vick makes the piece an unusually serious opera, echoing sometimes uncannily with motifs to be developed in Cost and The Magic Flute especially, but also substantial in its own right. Sometimes he presses the dramatic weight too hard; a scene for the Pasha and Constanza at table opens in still dumb-show for several minutes, and simply cannot seize attention even in the relatively intimate ambience of the Loretto-Hilton Theater. But generally, with the help of Andrew Porter's translation and an intelligent cast, he draws out full and dignified characters.

room to find a wealth of variety among the distressed nobilities of love, while David Eisler provided an ardent, determined young Pedrillo and Cheryl Parrish a Blonde of cool level-headedness but attractively warm vocal colour. It could possibly have been too uncomic a comedy were it not that Kevin Rupnik's set offers at once severity and easy opportunities for farce: the former in the blank masonry right across the stage, the latter in the multiplicity of doors it turns out to contain. It also offers inviting spaces for lighting, to bathe a production of assiduous penetration.

The Rossini was more simply a frolic. This is the coronation opera that had its first modern performance at Pesaro in 1984, and Saint Louis had the advantage of advice not only from the score's reconstructor, Janet Johnson, but from the Rossini scholar Philip Gossett, who worked with the singers in developing an appropri-ately flamboyant, exhibitionist style of ornamentation. The naturalness of the result, along with the sometimes spectacular bravura, must be a tribute to him as well as to the abilities of the singers, among whom the tenor Richard Croft showed himself a radiant artist of coloratura lyricism.

Nobody else was quite on that level of perfected achievement, though there were strong contributions from the soprano Donna Zapola (possessed of an opulent but clear sound, and a act the prima donna), from the quite different, colder and decisive soprano Stephanie Friede, from the amusingly po-faced mezzo Melanie Sonnenberg and from Patricia Schumann as the light-spirited, warm-hearted hostess. Others offered effective character performances: Eric Halfvarson as the Don Alfonso-like cunning magus, Kurt Link as the irrepressibly goodhumoured German general and Jan Opalach as Lord Sidney (nice to know that English stuffiness is still as funny in Saint Louis in 1986 as it was in Paris in 1825).

Colin Graham shuffled the cards brilliantly, but his chief dramatic coup was to use tiny children, magnificently dressed as maskers, for the ballet and the mimed coronation: an exactly right injection of levity into the optimistic finale (after all, we know, as Rossini may well have suspected, that Charles X was not entirely a Good Thing). Richard Buckley's musical direction, and the playing of the Saint Louis Symphony, hrought oot the froth and the sumptuousness of the score.

The other journey outside standard repertory was to Knoxville, summer 1915, for William Mayer's adaptatioo of A Death in the Family - it "adaptation" is quite the word for a ruthless reduction of James Agee's admittedly pretentious prose to make bald dialogue for a three-act melodrama. There is a nice little scene where Rufus's part is boldly bodied forth in a staged fantasy, but otherwise the music hardly does more than provide watered-down Brittenish supporting sounds. Menotti-like outbursts of diatonic passion, and Americana. Still, the evening was held together hy some excellent performances, notably from Jake Gardner, who sang and acted the ideal dad, from the treasurahle young lyric soprano Dawn Upshaw, from the appealing mezzo Phyllis Pancella and from the strong, ripe hlack soprano Deborah Ford. Mayer had at least provided chances for an ensemble company to show its

The Tales of Hoffmann, of course, is something else, and perhaps too big and star-centred for Saint Louis. Colin Graham's production followed his 1970 ENO staging in distancing itself from the traditional score, which meant that the sensitive, puretoned soprano Juliana Grodek was oot ohliged to lose her calm in the usual Olympia aria, but the smallness of the stage and the disappointingly prosaic lead from Michael Myers made the opera seem, perhaps oot wholly unsuitably, misguided. Carmen next year seems a still more parlous notion: one looks forward much more to Handel and another Rossini from this choice company, which could be set for another decade of stylish achievement under the new leadership of Charles Mackay.

St Magnus Festival

Awakening ghosts

The Lighthouse Phoenix Cinema, Kirkwall

Here, at the end of the St Magnus Festival, was a strik-ing demonstration that there is indeed a local audience for Maxwell Davies, enough to pack the cinema with several hundred people to see his opera of hysterical lighthousekeepers. And they were re-warded with a performance of vivid intensity. The Fires of London under Gunter Bauer Schenk brimmed with life and character in every department, though special praise must go to Richard Watkins, the horn player, for his whooping virtuoso interroganons and to Mark Glentworth for his fast slaloms up and down the marimba. The cast too was excellent.

Neil Mackie is the perfect Davies tenor, with a bright radiance that lives dangerously in its sensitivity. Henry Herford was the strong Blazes, the intemperateness of the man enhanced by his Scottish accent (characterization in this work is on that level of directness), and Ian Comboy offered a warm yet dark portrait of the self-satisfied

Only the piece itself remains a puzzle. Ghost stories gener-ally work because they set out from a thoroughly recogniz-able world and then introduce strangeness, hut The Lighthouse is bizarre and grotesque right from the start, with the opening court scene so elaborately stylized and the main act at once set in a style of caricature: Arthur is singing in goody-goody falsetto almost as soon as he opens his mouth. Then again, the set of song-fantasies for the three keepers looks a wooden device, each one an unashamed parody, each following the last as if they were party pieces. Yet the power of the climax is not only unforgettable but also un-avoidable, no matter how well one thinks one knows the

Perhaps this is not such a conundrum. Davies may be giving one every reason to discount the opera on dramat-ic grounds, only then reveal-ing that music really can awaken the ghosts we have thought to be freed from. If so, David William's production may be operating in a similar fashion. Some of its naturalistic detail, like the mimed walking upstairs and even the lighthouse itself, invites derision, and yet the return of the keepers as automated dum-mies is a telling realization of the ending.

With this performance Davies's term as artistic direc-tor of the St Magnus Festival came to an end. His farewell announcement left no doubt that he hopes his successor, Glenys Hughes, will hold to his commitment to "the highest possible artistic stan-dards". It also left no doubt that this has been a struggle. The 1987 festival is scheduled to revive The Martyrdom of St Magnus, but there must be doubt that it will be able, without Davies at the forefront, to be at once international and local.

Cabaret Barbara Cook Donmar Warehouse

For those with memories of Broadway in the 1950s, or cherished old recordings of Candide and The Music Man. it will seem rather late io the day for anybody to be discovering Barbara Cook. However, an event is an event however long overdue; and Tuesday night's West End début marked a personal conquest outmatching anything I have ever witnessed at the Palladium or Drury Lane.

markable appearance, Miss Cook wastes no time over transatlantic courtesies or stories about the old days. She is there to sing, and what she has to tell us about herself comes exclusively through the music. She comes on singing "Tve Loved a Piano" (as well she might with such an accompamist as the steel-fingered Wally Harper), announces tersely "George Gershwio wrote these songs" and launches toto a programme that variously causes your heart to pound and your mouth to drop open in ecstatic appreciation of such sound and such emotion-

And, as with all great performers, all you can really say beyood the usual boundaries. Most ohviously she is a soprano of extreme vocal purity and range of colour. When she delivers a fastidious lyric, the effect is to make singing seem an ideal form of human speech. Every time a line recurs it means something different. When she goes into scat or tears into "Sweet Georgia Brown" you can feel the earth shifting under your feet. Jazz rhythms are anchored to the bar-line, so that, when she tugs loose from it, syncopation appears as a feat of amazing physical strength. Whether in stormy arrangements of great old oumbers or more recent songs by Harry Nilsson and Melissa Manchester, the partnership with Mr Harper is crucial. He is an accompanist who gives no quarter. The top of Yamaha is removed, and when it comes to climaxes he plays it like an anvil. The joint performance is at once an immaculately precise partner-ship and a merciless contest. London at present has nothing more thrilling to offer.

Irving Wardle

ECO/Litton Elizabeth Hall

The similarities between Maurice Duruflé's Requiem and Faure's muted masterpiece of half a century earlier have tended to obscure the later work's unique properties. In-habiting much the same world of misty harmonies and undemonstrative lyricism, Durufié is at once more ascetic yet more extrovert. The modal contours and metrical freedoms of plainsong seep from Duruflé's melodies like incense from a thurible; but in combination it is their sensuality rather than their spirituality that overwhelms, and at the natural chimaxes of the Requiem Duruflé strives for (and often achieves) a bolder impact than was ever part of Fauré's scheme.

These sudden transitions, from ecclesiastical polyphony to hrilliant fervour, were especially noticeable under Andrew Litton's direction. He made much, for example, of the sudden surge in the "Kyrie" where the trumpets break away from their cantus firmus lines into strident par-allel triads. There was a similar excitement in his handling of the "Sanctus", where the cross-rhythms and unsettied modulations are suddenly marshalled into an unambiguous blaze of E flat major.

Perhaps his emphasis on urgency eliminated some of the work's majesty: the accelerando in "Libera me" seemed artificially whipped up, and the gorgeous final cadence of the work (a ripe slither ending on a jazzy ninth) should surely have been milked for as long as the singers had breath. Otherwise Litton deserves credit for revealing the poten-tial of this under-performed

So, too, do his forces. The Tallis Chamber Choir displayed an appealing timbre and considerable control in the forte passages. John Scott skimmed through the com-plex organ passagework dex-trously, though Duruffé surely had in mind an instrument with a grander palette of colours. The mezzo Judith Howarth and the bartone Anthony Michaels-Moore sang the small solos with appropriate restraint.

Earlier the English Chamber Orchestra brought style and pungency to far jollier French repertoire: Debussy's Petite Suite, in which even the timpani playing was elegant; and Françaix's L'Horloge de flore, where the oboist Neil Black flowered among the flowers and made us forget the Richard Morrison Katya.

Miss Benackova deserves

Radiant, life-enhancing power: Gabriela Beñackova (left) with the bright stage presence of Libuse Márová

the widest possible exposure in this role. She sings with radiant power, her voice never seeming under pressure except when cooveying the quiver of intimate emotion. She also shows a good deal more sophistication than the orchestra under Frantisek Vajnar, who conducts a reading of raw energy and impulse.

The other characters act as the human surfaces by which Katya is emotionally caressed and tormented, their physical relationship mere symbols of her isolation. There is the girlish affection Katya receives from the Varvara of Libuse Márová, whose bright stage presence makes up for her ochre timbre. There is everything of the foul-mou-thed spitting brute in Dalibor Jedlicka's Dikoy, whose drun-ken intimacy with Kabanicha goes just far enough to appal the imagination. And there is the Boris of Miroslav Kopp, a young tenor whose timidity throws into relief Katya's onesided need to love and be loved.

For all his coarse vocal manners, the Tichon of Miroslav Frydlewicz is the ideal foil to both Katya and Kabanicha: his hulky frame is no more able to embrace his wife than separate from his mother's apron strings, and he caves in at the end like an overgrown schoolboy hlubbing at Mummy's knees.

Nadezda Kniplova sings Kabanicha, a role which, along with Kostelnicka in Jenufa, she has made her own during the past 20 years on stage and on record. Though the top of the voice is less true than before, her command of the jagged exclamations of Kabanicha's vocal line is in-tact, and it is hard to distinguish where her character-ization leaves the voice and becomes the person. She glow-ers over Katya as Act I shudders to its sinister conclusion, she jerks Katya's face into token subservience in the domestic scene that follows, and triumphantly prevents anyone from interrupting Karya's confession. It is an awesome portrait of human makes the theatre safe for this year and significantly helps next year, allowing advance planning to resume. A full programme of dance seasons for the autumn will be announced next week.

This does not completely solve the problem of inade-quate housing for dance in London. For that, the profession is now recognizing that Sadler's Wells and a larger theatre are both needed. Negotiations continue to try to secure the Lycenm; a principal in them says the process is "like swimming in mud", but a guarded optimism remains.

CINEMA DETAILS CORRECT AT TIME OF GOING TO PRESS

By Gavin Bell Arts Correspondent

Mr Sam Wanamaker, an American actor and director. has confirmed plans for an authentic replics of Shakespeare's Globe Playhouse on its original site on London's South Bank, after a High Court wrangle was seltled yesterday.

Mr Justice Harman announced an oot of court settlement on the dispute over a 1981 agreement to provide council land for the theatre at Greenmore Wharf, Southwark, as part of a redevelopment scheme to have been carried out by Derno Estates.

Under its terms. Southwark council will pay Derno £7.2 million in compensation for failure to implement the agreement, and give the Shakespeare Globe Trust a 125-year lease on the one-acre sile at a peppercorn rent.

The present Labour council, elected in May 1982, had decided its priority was to provide employment and council bousing, and had declared the original agreement void on the grounds that some of its conditions had not been fulfilled - notably the relocation of a road sweepers' depot.

Mr Wanamaker, aged 67, said he was "delighted and jubilant." Mr Wanamaker was connected with the short-lived New Shakespeare Theatre in Liverpool, which was widely admired but closed in 1959 with estimated liabilities of more than £100,000.

He leaves for America next weekeod on a fund-raising trip for the Globe. He estimates the cost of the scheme at £12 million at current prices. Firm pleages of support so far total £1.7 million.

Construction of the circular open-air theatre will begin as soon as possible, and it is hoped it can open in 1991.

Scholars at international conferences have agreed on the design, incorporating three tiers of galleries (originally roofed with thatch) and the Doke of Edinhurgh bas set aside an oak at Wiodsor Great Park for a foundation post.

A resident company will perform the works of Shakespeare and his contemporaries during daylight hours for about foor months a year, also using an integrated recoostruction of loigo Jones's smaller Cockpit theatre. For Cromwell had it torn down.

But Mrs Chalker faced the unconcealed hostility of the Tory right over her meeting with Mr Tambo.

The most outspoken was Mr Jerry Wiggin, MP for Weston-super-Mare, who said that the Government was now "treating with terrorists," an accusation that the Mrs Chalker denied.

She was jeered by Back Benchers when she described Mr Tambo as "a man who certainly impressed yesterday with his total deslike of Mrs Chalker added:"We are n no way treating with terrorists. We are trying to solve a problem which the whole House believes has continued for too long."

She received equal support from the Back Benchers, and backing from the opposition parties for holding the talks with Mr Tambo.

Mr Mark Carlisle told her that many Conservative MPs believed she was right to talk to the ANC as an important voice to be heard at this time. He called for measures to safeguard the Commonwealth and force change in South

Since the emergency was imposed, one CBS News cam-eraman, Mr Wim De Vos, a Dutch national has been expelled. Two other foreign journalists, an American, Mr Richard Manning, the bureau chief of Newsweek, and Mr Dan Sagir, an Israeli free-lance, have been ordered to leave.

Cable and Wireless It is apt that Cable & Wireless should produce yesterday's fine set of results on the same day that the industry's watchdog, Professor Bryan Carsberg, makes it clear in his 1985 annual report that his eagle eye is on British Telecom's pricing structure. With the inauguration in May of Mercury Communication's switched service, competition for the nation's telecommunication traffic is now up and running. Professor Carsberg is committed to giving Mercury more than a fair chance.

The better than expected 20 per cent increase in C&W's 1985-6 pretax profits to £295 million does not even hint at what Mercury could contribute in, say, five years time. Last year it made losses of £13 million on turnover of £4 million. Investment in the network was £49 million bringing the total so far to £125 million. By the end of this financial year that will have increased to £200 million and breakeven will be in sight. Independent forecasts for Mercury's revenues suggest a build-up to almost £200 million for the year to March 1988 and £500 million the following year.

The favourable terms which Oftel determined for the terms under which Mercury would interconnect with the BT network spurred C& W into speeding up its investment. Yesterday's warning from Professor Carsberg that be will rework the RPI-3 pricing formula if British Telecom's return on capital employed is too high should similarly bring cheer to C&W (whose performance on that criteria is rather better). To compete with Mercury, British Telecom will bave to offer better terms to its major business users. It will also continue to erode the subsidisation of local calls by long distance calls. But Professor Carsberg warned yesterday that this rebalancing can only be carried to a point that is justified on economic grounds. Similarly, any cut-price deals for bigh traffic users will also rest on British Telecom proving that price reductions go hand in hand with lower costs. Oftel will be watching carefully that Mercury does not fall victim to any cross-subsidisation within British

Mercury is just one link in C&W's global strategy which is reaching rate within days. Paul Volcker, the around the world. Further investment Fed chairman, is seen as committed to is planned this year on fibre optics within the United States to link the planned submarine cables across the Atlantic and from the West Coast to Japan. Total capital expenditure is likely to rise from £255 million to nearer £300 million but with partners like Nynex there should be no financing troubles. Last year's results were achieved despite a £21 million adverse currency effect and a fall in profits from the Middle East following the handover of the network in the Yemen Arab Republic. Hong Kong remains the pivot in Far Eastern telecommunications traffic and contributed 65 per cent of the company's profits.

The improvement in turnover - at just 5 per cent -- looks slightly disappointing but was dampened by currency effects and the planned slowdown in equipment sales and contract work. Underlying improve-ment on the public telecommunications business was more than 10 per cent. C. & W.'s profits attributate to ordinary shareholders rose from £142 million to £180 million; earnings per share are up 22 per cent from 31.7p to 38.7p; and a final dividend of 6p per share, against 4.9p, brings the total dividend up to 9.5p, also an increase of 22 per cent of 22 per cent. There is enough telecommunications traffic for all players at the moment but C&W has a head start as a newcomer with modern equipment. In December the Government sell-off and rights issue was almost caught out by a falling share price. Yesterday those who bought in at 587p were rewarded with a 15p rise to 705p.

The change of causation, as so often in these things, is a long one. It starts with the first quarter figures for gross national product in Japan, Much to the chagrin of Mr Nakasone, hoping for such an overwhelming vote of confidence in the July 6 double elections that his party won't dare make him stand down, the GNP fell, by 0.5 per cent. Weak first quarter GNP has become a familiar pattern in the major economies but for Japan it becomes a particular blow, both because of the election and because it was the first quarterly decline in GNP for 11 years. And so, the pressure is on for a discount rate cut in Japan. The scene now moves on to New York, where money market rates edged down yesterday, and where some traders are talking of a cut by the Federal Reserve Board in the discount following rather than leading rate cuts elsewhere, despite a series of weak economic statistics over the past month. Against this, the dollar has started to look rather sickly again - yesterday the pound rose 80 points to $1.52, and the dollar dropped to DM2.21 against the mark and below 166 against the yen. Friday's US trade figures will clearly be important. Assuming these two bits of the igsaw fit into place, the prospects for lower base rates here are really rather good. The next set of money supply figures, due on July 8, have to be good, unless the Bank of england is prepared to take responsibility for a mass leap of stockbrokers' economists from the top of the Stock Exchange tower.

US investors revive blue chips

by Michael Clark

American investors came to the aid of a tired London stock market yesterday and breathed some life back into blue chip stocks. Dealers reported heavy support for British stocks over night following a strong rally oo Wall Street. The Americans were bidding 410p for stocks like Beecham, where turnover reached over 700,000 shares, and continued to buy them when trading resumed in London yesterday. Beecham closed in London 5p dearer at 403p, after 408p.

The Americans were also buyers of Reuters, 2p cheaper at 496p, where turnover topped 2 million shares; BAT Industries, unchanged at 400p. (jurniver 520,000 shares), Jagnar, 2p higher at 525p, after 528p, (540,000 shares); and British Telecoin, 2p cheaper at 228p, (1 million

The FT 30-share index opened up 8.6, but failed to bold its best levels, closing 5.4 higher at 1,344.8. The FT-SE 100 closed 4.5 up at 1,629.5.

The strong pound and continued support for the US bond market provided gilts with further solid gains. Rises stretched to more than £1/2 at nne stage with investors still boping for an early cut in bank hase rates.

Oil shares were mixed, but Burmah stood out with a 20p rise to 410p, after 413p, on revived bid talk. Mr Gerald Ronson's Heron Corp recently completed the sale of its holding, but the whispers of a possible bid for the group still abound. Analysts claim the shares are being re-rated and several of them paid a visit to the group's operations in Germany recently and obviously came away impressed.

Glaxo lost 20p at £10.35 after Wood Mackenzie, the influential Scottish broker, announced that it was taking a bearish stance towards the shares. Apparently, Wood Mackenzie is now worried about prospects for Glaxo's new drug Ceftazidime in Japan, the world's largest injectable Cephalosporin market, after the group failed to obtain a premium price for the product said to be the most advanced drug of its type. News of the pricing arrangement has come as a disappointment to City analysts. Wood Mackenzie claims that with more bad news than good likely over the short term, sentiment will probably be affected. The broker urges clients with overweight positions to take the opportunity to lighten their holdings.

On the Unlisted Securities Market, shares of Acorn Com-puters were nuchanged at 50p. despite news of the resignation from the board of Mr Chris Curry, joint founder and for-

But the group had to be rescued by the Italian typewriter group Olivetti and Mr Curry's stake was eventually worth only a fraction of its original estimate.

Keep an eye on LeisureTime International, the botelier and soliday operator, where Mr Timothy Aitken, chairman and former chief executive of Aitken Hume, recently bought a 16 per cent stake. The word from Jersey is that the group's hotels are doing a roaring trade. There is also talk of a bid of 140p. That compares with the current price of 102p.

Rotaflex, currently the target of an unwanted £52 milion hid from Emess Lighting. firmed another 5p to 448p after the news that it had entered into bid talks with MK Electric, down 15p at 365p. MK Electric joins in Rotaflex bidding

MK Electric, the electrical accessories manufacturer, yesterday revealed it was invnlved in bid talks with Rotaflex, the electricals manufacturer, which is resisting a £50.4 milling bid from Emess Lighting. MK Electric also annunced it had bought 5.2 per cent of Rotaflex's shares in the market last week.

MK said it may make an offer in convertible preference shares on terms around 460p per share, but would wish to secure the recommendation of the Rotaflex board. Rotaflex shares rose 5p to 448p.

Emess's paper bid is worth 429p a share, with Emess

CHARTER Charter Consolidated PLC

SHARP IMPROVEMENT IN PROFITS

Preliminary Results for the Year ended 31 March, 1986

Highlights

- Profit before tax: £28.7 million up 74%
- Profit Attributable to Charter: up £9.2 million to £19.8 million
- Earnings: 18.8p per share up 88%
- Net worth: 385 million (366p per share) up 11%

Summary of Results

Profits showed a sharp improvement in the year to 31 March, 1986. Revenue increased and interest charges were much lower. Profit before tax, up 74 per cent, rose £12.2 million to £28.7 million. After taxation at a lower effective rate, profit after tax more than doubled to £19.8 million from last year's £9 million and earnings per share were 18.8p compared with 10p.

An increased dividend of 7.75p per share is recommended to give a total dividend of 11.5p.

The better profits of Charter reflect continued progress in reshaping the Group, reducing the level of borrowing and seeking higher returns on capital. Progress has been made in all three areas during the past year and although more needs to be done (and is in hand) in civil engineering, the advances made by the operating companies in the manufacturing sector. where the bulk of operating capital is now invested, are encouraging.

The Company

Charter Consolidated is the parent company of a British group engaged in manufacturing, construction mining, and finance and investment.

Charter's business has been extensively reshaped in recent years and much of the capital employed is now in operating companies.

The manufacturing companies produce mining equipment, railway track components, fire protection and other building materials. The construction industry companies are engaged in civil engineering, construction and insulation services. The mining companies produce coal and tungsten.

Besides the operating companies the Group has interests in the marketing, refining, and fabrication of precious metals, the manufacture of automotive and industrial catalysts, in natural resources and in financial services.

The Annual Report will be posted to shareholders on or about 10th July 1986.

We'd like to get on first name terms.

PLEASE DON'T THINK we're advocating any unseemly informality. Far from it.

We merely wish to become the first name that springs to mind when you're considering anything to do with offices, shops, or industrial and hightechnology buildings.

Anything, did we say? Yes, more or less.

We're aware that's rather a large claim. However, we are rather a large practice. (We've eighty-five partners and associates, and over five hundred staff in the UK alone.)

And we didn't get big by turning down small jobs. In the past year, for example, we've handled instructions on units ranging in size from 400 square feet up. Admittedly, the largest is over 1.5 million square feet, and it's true that much of our work is extremely large.

As a matter of fact we think our size adds perspective to our experience and skills.

Big can be beautiful too, you know.

We'd like to put our skills at your service. And, to begin with, we invite you to have a copy of our personal directory.

It will guide you to the person you need.

Of course who you need depends on what you want. So let's run through what we do.

Our investment people handle buying and selling, and the funding of property development.

Our agency teams cover developing, letting and acquiring, as well as rent reviews and lease renewals. Our valuations group can tell you what your property's worth.

And in these days of 'intelligent buildings' you need highly intelligent advice on management, maintenance, and the improvement of property.

What's more our databank is one of the largest sources of commercial property information; which is one reason we act as consultants to so many clients.

And we're just as at home abroad.

In other Jones Lang Wootton firms overseas there are a further 125 partners and 1,200 staff, in 35 offices, in 14 countries, on 4 continents. Whether you're at home or abroad, large or small, we're at your service. If you'd like to know anything else, please call us on 01-493 6040.

At the Annual General Meeting on June 25th the Chalm.an, Lord Cayzer, made the following remarks which are supplementary to his statement which accompanied the Accounts:

As reported we have achieved a profit for the past year before tax of £76,848,000. I have reported that our shipping activity is almost at an end. I am very sad that this should be the case, but the slump in world shipping is the worst thet I can remember in my lifetime, and we simply could not afford to wait for the turn of the tide. Our association with shipping, once our main ectivity, goes back to my grandfather's day; without Sir Charles Ceyzer's initiative B & C would not exist.

As I have said, the result from air transport is disappointing. The fixed wing side is a difficult one in which to make profits, but I am glad to say that, so far, things this year ere rather better. In regard to Bristow Helicopters we are passing through a time of recession owing to the fall in the price of oil, but as I have said Bristow Is e strong, well managed Company and will weather

Airwork continues to prosper and to trade setisfactorily. Our other interests, including hotels and office equipment, are also performing well.

Heving sold the interests I have mentioned we have begun to re-deploy the funds which have become available. In my Statement I have mentioned several of our new opportunities, such as Kaines, the commodity dealing company, and The Scottish National Trust. More recently, we have announced the formation of e new company - Royale Resorts International Limited - jointly with the Sun Hotels International Group; we look forward to the success of this new enterprise which constitutes e significant expansion of our existing interest in the hotel and leisure sector.

We must, however, expect e little time to elapse before the profits from our new investments begin to flow in proper fashion.

As usual I heve great pleasure in expressing my warm thanks to all who work in the Group and by their efforts contribute so much to it. Good management is crucial to our success, and in this regard I am very glad to welcome Mr. John Gunn and Mr. David Kinloch to the Board of British & Commonwealth. They will be an added strength to e good management team.

I am also always conscious that private enterprise depends on a government which is in sympathy with that aim, and which believes thet it is important for the community and country to have companies and people who are ready to stand on their own feet and take edvantage of opportunities as they become available to them. We certainly agree with this, and the Government heve clearly shown that they think along these lines.

Dixons reaps reward of investment in Brussels

By Judith Huntley

All eyes are turned to Dix-ons Group as its bitterly contested £1.9 billion bid for Woolworth Holdings draws to a conclusion. But a shrewd purchase in the property sector more than a year ago is now bearing Dixons useful dividends.

It bought Codic, a Belgian property company in March. 1985 for a mere £1 million from the now defunct Espley Trust, the property company formerly run by Mr Ron Dixons Commercial Properties, the property development and trading arm of Dixons, bought 90 per cent of Codic, leaving 10 per cent with Mr Jacques Lemal, the property company's president. It was recognized at the time that Codic was an extremely well-managed compadevelopment in Belgium. But the market in the country at the time was still far from exciting. Brussels, in particular, had been a no-go area for British developers and investors for more than a decade. Maoy had had their fingers burned after the collapse of the property market in 1973-4.

The story is now different. Demand in Brussels is high and new supply is almost non- is the strength of demand for there is pressure for yields to Britain.

rents and a bealthy invest-ment market.

Codic is set to take full advantage of the situation, carning its parent, Dixons, a healthy profit into the bargain. The company has sold two of its schemes — its first office developments in the centre of Brussels — to foreign investors within the past month.

The 4,000 sq-metre building, prelet to the European Economic Community at BFr5,200 (£74) a sq metre near the British Embassy, was bought by Azko-Pensioenfonds, a Dutch institution for BFr300 million. And the 7,400 sq-metre block at Rue Monteyer was bought by VITA, a Swiss insurance company, for BFr600million.

Codic has been carefully nurturing a land bank in the city, ensuring that it can develop at a time when there is a scarcity of new office space. The Rue Monteyer project is expected to see rents of BFr5,600 a sq metre, a figure which has yet to be achieved in Brussels.

Richard Ellis, the British estate agents which handles much of Codic's work, says that new rent levels of BFr6500 a sq metre will soon be achieved in Brussels, such Office rents in the prime area of Brussels, the Quartier Leopold, have risen by 25 per cent in the past 18 months and by 67 per ceot sioce 1980. Vacancies in modern offices, which stood at 20 per cent in 1976, have fallen to 2 per cent today with new offices having no vacancies. Falling interest rates and improved market conditions in Belgium are attracting both indigenous and foreign funds to commercial property.

British developers would have a hard time competing with the Belgians on their home territory. But there have been signs of interest from the likes of London & Edinburgh Trust and Hammerson, Investors are finding that there is a shortage of properties to buy. Constable's power of arrest. without warrant

Ward v Chief Constable of Avon and Somerset Constabu-

Before Lord Justice Slade and Lord Justice Croom-Johnson [Judgment given June 25] Where a constable's reas for suspicion were sufficient he was under no obligation to go looking for further evidence or to probe every explanation before exercising his powers of arrest under section 2(4) of the Criminal Law Act 1967.

The Court of Appeal dismissed an appeal by the plaintiff, Christine Lesley Ward, from a decision of Mr Assistant Recorder Backhouse at Bristol Conoty Court on October 16,

Mr Christopher Sharp for the intiff, Mr Malcolm Cotterill for the chief constable.

LORD JUSTICE CROOM-JOHNSON, delivering the re-served judgment of the court, said that the case arose out of the aftermath of the riots in the St Paul's area of Bristol at Easter

The plaintiff brought an ac-tion against the chief constable alleging wrongful arrest and The judge held that her arrest was lawful, but that thereafter the plaintiff (who was released without being charged) was held in custody unnecessarily long by about two and a half hours and for that he awarded damages.

The riots were on the night of April 2 and 3. Much damage was done. There was widespread destruction. Shops were looted. Some premises called kiosks, which comprised a shop and stock rooms, were ransacked. Confectionery up to a value of £10,000 was stolen. That included a large quantity of Easter

The stolen goods had to be traced and offenders identified. and the police sent out teams which made investigations and, where appropriate, arrests.

Detective Sergeant Edwards

was the officer who arrested the plaintiff. He had oo April 5 been given information from a reli-able source that a televisioo set had been carried into a property belonging to the plaintiff's cohabitor. He went there with two other officers at about 9.30 am on Easter Sunday, April 6.

They had no warrants but were admitted voluntarily. DS Edwards had a list of stolen items which he should look for. It included the stolen Easter

They searched the house and in the plaintiff's bedroom he found 11 Easter eggs which he carried downstairs. There were two more eggs downstairs.

The plaintiff said that the eggs where have the chain had boundt were hers, that she had bought them at a supermarket which she named, and that they cost 37 pence each.

OS Edwards was suspicious at the number of eggs and because they had no price labels nor did they appear ever to have had price labels affixed but which d been removed. des the price stated by the plaintiff was too cheap and that suspicion seemed justified be-cause later at the police station the plaintiff stated a higher DS Edwards's power to arrest without warrant derived from section 2(4) of the 1967 Act which stated: "Where a constable, with reasonable cause, suspects that an arrestable ofce has been committed, be may arrest without warrant anyone whom he, with reasonable cause, suspects to be guilty of the offence". The first part of the requirement was satisfied since DS

Edwards knew that an arrestable offence, the theft of the Easter eggs, had been committed. The question was whether he had sonable cause to suspect the plaintiff of having committed it.
Until the 1967 Act the power of arrest without warrant for or arrest without variant in-suspicion of felony was prin-cipally exercised at common law. Wrongfid arrest, false imprisonment and malicious prosecution were often regarded as different descriptions of the same wrong the test io each being whether there was "reasonable and probable cause" for the arrest or prosecu-

The 1967 Act dropped the word "probable" so far as arrests hy constables were concerned but gave the constable a discretion as to whether or not

rried by juries and still were, but, the question of reasonable cause. had for long been a question for the judge and not for the jury.
The primary usine was not whether DS Edwards had properly exercised his powers but was whether the condition precedent to that power arising was fulfilled, namely, whether the power arose at all. The finding of the judge one that issue was a finding of fact over which the appeal tribunal. had the same control as the trail

Even where the appeal was on a question of fact, the Court of Appears dury was to rehear the case and reconsider the evidence but it would be slow to interfere with the trial judge's finding of fact where there that been a conflict of evidence. The court was therefore free to review the trial judge's approach.

It was said by the plaintiff that DS Edwards's inquiries prior to arrest were not detailed exough. However, it was unnecessary for the police to probe every explanation. As Lord Devlin said in Shaaban Bin Hussien v Chong Fook Kam ([1970] AC. 942 948): suspicion in its ordinary meaning is a state of conjecture or surmise where proof is lacking. I suspect but I cannot prove'.

Complete proof need not be obtained if the grounds of suspiciou were themselves reasonably sufficient. The evi dence of reasonable cause in the present case was thin but the question was whether it was sufficient.

But looking objectively as one should. DS Edwards did have reasonable cause for making the arrest. He had found the eggs in circumstances which aroused his suspicion and which called for an explanation. He was given an explanation which was apparently untrue. He disbelieved it, and on good

It could not be said that no reasonable constable should have exercised his discretion to as in make the arrest. He might have decided out to arrest, but he was entitled to do what he

Meaning of stallholder's handling food while smoking

Cuckson v Bugg Before Lord Justice Woolf and Mr Justice Simon Brown [Judgment given June 24]

Although the phrase "while he is handling any open food" in regulation 8(e) of the Food Hygiene (Markets, Stalls and Delivery Vehicles) Regulations (SI 1966 No 791) did not bear the wide interpretation of referring 10 the occupation of the handling of food as described in regulation 2(2), the word "handling" in regulation 8(e) was not cooffoed to the actua touching of open food but applied where a person was carrying out an operation referred to in regulation 2(2). The Queen's Bench Di-visional Court so held when allowing the prosecutor's appeal from the dismissal on October 17,1985 by St Edmondsbury Justices of an offence contrary to regulations 8, 25 and 26 of the Regulations. The court did not remit the case to the justices because of the lapse of time.

Mr Mark Suttoo for the rosecutor, the defendant did not appear and was not repre-

MR JUSTICE SIMON BROWN said that the defen-dant, a market trader for 30 years; had a vegetable stall. He kept the bulk of his produce, if not on the stall, in boxes to a lorry parked about ten feet behind the stall.

An eoviroomental health officer saw the defendant serve a number of customers and saw him smoking a cigarette, oot while he was actually in the customers but to the short intervals between so doing.

Before actually serving a customer, the defendant would put down his lighted cigarette and then when he had finished serving one and before serving the next he picked it up, drew or it, inhaled and exhaled and then served the next customer. Regulation 8 under the title "Personal cleanliness" pro-vided: "A person who engages in the handling of food shall while so engaged - . . . (e) refrain from the use of tobacco or any other smoking mixture or snuff while he is handling any open food or is in any food room in which there is open food." The handling of food was defined in regulation 2(2).

The first question which arose

the opening clause, namely who was envisaged by "A person who engages in the handling of food shall while so engaged.

The opening clause had to be given a wide construction. The rase "while so engaged" necessarily required that anybody who was engaged in an occupa-tion falling within regulation 2(2) attracted the application of It was coulended that the phrase in 8(e), namely "while be is handling any open food" carried an equally wide interpretation. That was an impossible contention.

The whole of the final phrase in regulation 8(e) starting with "while he is handling open food" occessarily operated as a the opening clause of the regula-

However it did not follow that the word "handling" was con-fined to actual touching of open food. That was an equally impossible construction of "handling open food" given the definition in regulation 2(2).

One could be handling any open food even when not actually touching it provided only and always that one was company.

and always that one was carry-ing out the sort of operation to which regulation 2(2) referred. It was open to justices to arrive at the conclusion that a stall-holder had broken off his operation of his stall and that having done so, he was not handling any open food and therefore could quite safely

There would not be a sufficient breaking off of an operaconcerned the precise ambit of non if a stall-holder decided to conduct his operation of his stall puffs of a cigarette in between customers, leaving the lighted cigarette conveniently at hand. The justices did not ask the most critical question raised or the information, namely: "Had when he between serving cus-tomers went to his lorry to have tion of his vegetable stall or was he continuing to operate the stall and doing what the regulation clearly barred him from

The justices did not properly address themselves to the queition oo the proper interpreta-tion of regulation 8 which was thrown up on the facts of the Presence of goods not necessary for trading in park

Burgess v McCracken Before Lord Justice Watkins and Mr Justice Otton [Judgment given June 25]

It was not a necessary ingredi-ent for an offence of carrying ou a trade in a park without permission, contrary to regula-tion 4(5) of the Royal and Other tion 4(5) of the Royal and Other Parks and Gardens Regulations (SI 1977 No 217), that the prosecution should prove that the trade alleged to have been carried on in the park was a trade concerning goods present at the time of the alleged offence.

The question that should be asked by the court dealing with a

asked by the court dealing with a defendant charged with such an offence was whether, in the circumstances of the particular case, the defendant was carrying case, the defendant was carrying on a trade.

The Queen's Bench Divisional Court so held when it allowed the appeal of the prosecutor, Police Constable Burgess, against the decision of Mr Ronald D. Bartle, a Bow Street Metropolitan Stipendiary Magistrate, who on April 4, 1985, dismissed an information laid against Robert McCraeken against Robert McCracken alleging an offence contrary to regulation 4(5) of the 1977 Regulations and section 2(1) of Regulations and section 2(1) of the Parks Regulation (Amend-ment) Act 1926, as amended by section 92(1) and Schedule 3 to the Criminal Justice Act 1967. Regulations provides "Unless the Secretary of State's written permission has first been ob-permission has first been obtained, no person using a park shall ... (5) carry on any trade or business m a Park..."

Mr Roger Ter Haar for the prosecutor, Mr McCracken in person.

LORD JUSTICE WATKINS said that the magistrate had found as fact that the defendant

two pedestrians and money was

The magistrate concluded that the facts of the case were indistinguishable from Newman v Lipman [1951] I KB 333) and he felt ohliged to follow that authority and dismissed the case without hearing evidence from the defendant

His Lordship said that it was accepted that the Mall was a part of St James's Park and was therefore within the amhit of the 1926 Act and the 1977 Regulations authorized by section 2(1). Mr Ter Haar contended that

Newman dealt with trading in a street and not trading in a park, and different considerations applied to trading in a street as opposed to trading in a park as the 1977 Regulations showed. He said that the main purpose of street trading regulations was to prevent obstruction on the street whereas the 1977 Regula-tions were aimed at the proper management of parks; their object was that persons using a park were not pestered or irpark were not pessered or irritated by persons acting as the defendant had done, and regulation 3 listed certain acts which were prohibited altogether.

The defendant contended that the 1977 Regulations did not apply to him because he was was through the post, he did not interfere with people's recreation and he was within the case of Newman.

His Lordship accepted Mr Te Haar's submissions and said that it was elear that the 1977 the proper management of parks

It was clear from the close of the prosecution case in the magistrates' court that there was evidence at that stage on which the magistrate could have in-ferred that the defendant was carrying on a trade in the park from his sole transaction; whether the magistrate would so infer was a matter for his determination since whether a trade was being carried on was a question of fact.

The appeal would be allowed and the case remitted to the magistrate to contioue the hear-

MR JUSTICE OTTON, agreeing, said that the question in the present case was not concerned with street trading as in Newman but whether the defendant was carrying on a trade in a park.

There was no total pro-hibition on all photographers, and licences could be obtained from the secretary of state.

The past year—the fifth since privatisation - has been a period of achievement and progress. Pre-tax profit has increased by 20 per cent from £245 million to £295 million; and earnings per share have increased by 22 per cent from 31.7 pence per share to 38.7 pence per share.

The establishment of a competitive, secure, global digital highway linking the major economic and financial centres of the world-our corporate objective—is progressing well. The global network being developed will meet the increasingly sophisticated telecom-munications needs of multinational corporations as well as the continuing demands of developing economies.

Our strategic development plans in the Far East and the Pacific have moved forward significantly.

We have responded positively to the invitation to form a partnership with C. Itoh, a leading Japanese trading corporation, in a feasibility study for an alternative international telecommunications company in Japan.

ing shareholding in the Company At the same time the Company took the opportunity of issuing some 56 million additional shares. I welcome almost 175.000 new shareholders as a result of this share offer-which was the second largest equity offering in the world.

Cable and Wireless achieved another goal by being the first British company to be listed on the Tokyo Stock Exchange on 2 April, 1986. This will contribute to the greater awareness of the Group in the Far East and will also contribute to planned future extensions of our activities in the vibrant economies of the Pacific Basin.

Your directors continue to pursue vigorously other interesting and worthwhile oppor-tunities which can only be disclosed as they reach fruition.

I am confident that the achievements of the future will not disappoint our new shareholders.

Support will be given by NTT(I) the international subsidiary of the Nippon Telephone and Telegraph Company which is the dominant operator of telecommunications in Japan.

By 1990 our new joint venture with Pacific Telecom of the United States and this new Japanese company expects to be operating a trans-Pacific fibre optic cable (PPAC).

This, with an extended fibre optic network across the United States and our trans-Atlantic fibre optic cable (PTAT), will enable the Group to handle telecom-munications traffic securely, rapidly and economically between the major business and finance centres of the world.

I welcome the interest of Nynex in becoming an equal and active partner with Cable and Wireless in the trans-Atlantic cable, Nynex, one of the largest Bell Operating Companies, operates the domestic telecommunications services in the north-eastern area of the United States from New York City to the border with Canada.

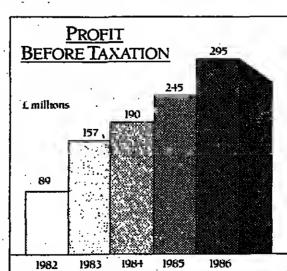

Such a partner-ship will provide the basis for a digital linkage between the United States and the digital network of Mercury in the United Kingdom, the 100 per cent subsidiary of Cable and Wireless.

The expansion of Mercury proceeds most satisfactorily. 15 May, 1986, wasan historic occasion when I had the privilege with the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, The Rt Hon Paul Channon, MP of inaugurating a competitive public switched network making Britain the second country in the world after the United States to have an alternative public network.

We hope that with the planned installation of local exchanges Mercury will be able to provide competitive services to an increasing number of customers. It is with considerable satisfaction that I can record that more than 80 per cent of Mercury equipment is provided from the United Kingdom.

The deregulation of the City of London's financial markets, the Big Bang, has stimulated an increased demand for a wider range of more sophisticated communication services. Mercury is laying a fibre optic network within the City to meet this demand, and also ordering a System X digital exchange which will be installed in London in the autumn.

Mercury is now a fully established international carrier, following its agreement with AT&T in April, 1986, to operate an international switched telephone service between the United Kingdom and the United States. New agreements with other administrations are being negotiated.

The Far East continues to be a major contributor to Group profits.

In December, 1985, I was privileged to open the Eastern Section of the Guangdong microwave project for which Cable and Wireless provided technical assistance.

On 14 March, 1986, I opened the Western Section, thus facilitating telecommunications traffic between the 25 cities now linked in the Guangdong Province and with Hong Kong.

The entire microwave system stretches over 1,000km. The project to allow direct dialling to Hong Kong from ten cities in the Pearl Delta area is substantially complete.

GENERAL APPOINTMENTS

sectors have doubled the number of jobs they provide during the past few years? Anyone tempted to respond with a nil return might be surprised at figures recently produced by the Management Consultants' Associ-

The MCA's membership com-prises the majority of the UK's major management consultancies. it sets striogent membership qualifications - for example, the average length of service with the firm musi be three years, and 90 per cent must hold appropriate profes-sional qualifications. Its 27 member firms employed more than twice as many staff in 1985 as they did in 1981 and numbers now stand at an all-time record of 3,500, generating about £175 million in fees in 1985.

Analysis of the MCA's figures suggests that consultancy's ability to buck the general employment trend is due primarily to the exponential rate of change in today's world and the consequent demand for specialized expertise. The use of consultants bas grown across the organizational spectrum, and the sector now employs a diverse range of expertise.

- Clients of all types use consultants because they need technical experts who understand their business problems. Sometimes business problems. Sometimes they are looking for an independent view on their plans or an objective assessment of a tricky problem; at other times they are looking for a spare hand at the pump or a special technical skill. Whichever it is, they expect someone on the ball who can understand their problems and work well with them. work well with them.

Information technology is the field which accounts for the largest single volume of MCA members' work. It has been a growth area for some time. The countless horror stories of organizations spending small fortunes on systems which took too long to develop, never worked properly and did not meet users' needs have had their effect. Using consultants for computer strategy and selection studies is videly seen as a thoroughly worthwbile investment

As information technology becomes more and more complex, with computers linked to one another, to telecommunications equipment, word-processors and so on, the need for technical advice becomes even more vital. The demand is just as great in the factory as in the office, with computer-controlled manufacturing systems handling everything from product design right the way through the various stages of the production process.

Tomorrow's growth of management consultancy will depend on the supply of capable people, says Richard Owen

Nowhere is this dependence on IT more apparent than in the finance sector. As the "Big Bang" gets ever closer banks, stockbro-kers and the like are racing desperately to install the real-time systems which, in the new, highly competitive global markets, will determine not just their success but their very survival. It is no surprise that the MCA's client analysis shows insurance, banking and finance as far and away the biggest users of management consultants.

Second on the list comes the public sector. The Government's efficiency drive has generated a requirement for consultants to help introduce modern management concepts and commercial practices into government depanments and organizations such as the National Health Service. Another significant source of work is privatization, with companies, the gas industry, airports, dockyards and water authorities.

In the private sector, the MCA's figures show that use of consultants is spread evenly across companies of all sizes. Small businesses, unable to justify employing full-time experts in specialized fields, have an obvious need for consultants: it is now easier to do so as there is government assistance for some

away from large headquarters staff, many businesses are keeping down head counts by using outside specialists to cover peak demands. The consultants can also bring knowledge of new developments with which any company will find it hard to keep

Change affects not only equip-ment and systems but also the whole area of business strategy. The status quo is gone, probably for ever. Fluidity and uncertainty are the hallmarks of the modern world. Survival depends on being continually aware of the directions in which the world is changing and on developing strategies to meet the requirements of today and tomorrow. This is yet another field in which the management consultant's breadth and objectivity is at a premium.

Sucb a bullish view of the market begs the obvious question: Can it last? Consultancy has always been a cyclical business. Is the current boom not bound to be followed by another crash, like that of the early 1970s?

There may be vulnerability in certain areas. The supply of privatization work is clearly limited, and a change of government could reduce the pressure on public sector efficiency. Post-Big Bang, the amount of finance sector work may also diminish. Overseas business is unpredictable, availability fluctuating markedly owing to factors such as oil prices, the economic situation in developing countries and general world trade conditions.

Overall, however, demand should be sustained, even increased. The pace of change, both specifically in areas such as information technology, and generally in terms of the whole business environment will accelerate rather than slacken off. The demand for rechnical and strategic advice looks set to grow with it. The experience in the United States, where the market is more mature, suggests that growth of consultancy in the UK sull has some way to onsultancy's past vul-nerability to cyclical downturns was due largely to its dependence on such sectors as engineering where its original growth was based. With the emphasis now on supplying a wide range of businesses with expenise in areas subject to seemingly boundless growth, the limiting factor is less demand than supply.

Consultancies have developed an insatiable appetite for the best people. They need to combine outstanding technical expertise with broad practical experience. Consultants have to be lateral thinkers, able to solve any kind of problem. They must possess highly developed communication skills together with the necessary personal qualities to attain rapport with clients at all levels from the factory floor and general office right up to the boardroom.

For the few who meet these exacting requirements, the re-wards are correspondingly high. No longer is consultancy seen primarily as a career stepping stone. Larger firms mean more promotion opportunities. Increased demand for consultancy services has resulted in bigher salaries. Perhaps no less important is that consultancy is fun; the variety of the work with bighly qualified and experienced colleagues is stimulating and

The future growth of management consultancy therefore de-pends above all else on the supply of highly capable people. The demand for their services appears to know no bounds. For the 1980s and beyond the motto seems to be: More work for the more able.

One of the more surprizing statistics in the graduate job market is that chartered accountancy firms are now recruiting for training no less than 10 per cent of all graduates going into employment for the first time.

Equally interesting is the fact that 30 per cent of them are women and that a growing proportion of the intake is from what the profession's largest body - The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales - calls "non-relevant" disciplines. This covers a whole spectruro of subjects that are not business related, though most of those whn are attracted into accountancy from other fields have numerate leanings.

Liesel Payne, is now in the final stages of her three years of training - for what used to be called articles - with a small Landan West End practice. She has a non-relevant degree in psychology and had a brief spell as a primary school teacher before deciding that that career was not fur ber. She admits to having been good at maths at school, but says that accounting maths is very basic. "It's mostly 'O' level stuff, though you do get into things like calculus in the theoretical papers in the Part 2 exams. In your everyday work, though, you're mostly using ordinary arithmetic."

In fact numeracy, in the numbercrunching sense is no long as important in accountancy as it used to be. "A lot of the routine work these days is done with computers," says Madeleine Ross, Student Counsellor at the Institute. "The emphasis now is on more analytical skills, interpreting the information that comes from the figures, coromunicating its implications to management and looking at all the ramifications of tax?

Emphasis is on analytical skills now, not numeracy

For this reason some of the bigger firms are now heavily engaged in activities which only a short time ago were little more than an added client service. Coopers & Lybrand, for instance, now have a management consultancy staff of 600, a threefold increase since 1982. Price Waterhouse are one of several large firms with a sizeable division specializing in the recruitment and selection of financial staff. Other practices have begun to muscle in on some of the activities that used to be the preserve of merchant banks, such as raising funds and arranging for stock market quotations. No doubt the "big bang" will see a further expansion in such directions.

Accountants, in fact, are shedding the traditional image which associates them largely with preparing balance sheets and tax returns. As 1986 is Industry Year, the Institute has launched a campaign to make the public - and the graduates they want to attract into the profession aware of the wide ranging nature of their contribution to the economy.

"Accountants are concerned with devising the financial structures that will enable companies to meet the objectives of their business plan — for instance in the matter of funding, "says spokesman Andrew Colquhoun. "Smaller firms that can't afford a full time financial controller of their nwn are increasingly turning their external accountants to help them plan their whole financial strategy as well as to set up control systems that will enable management to monitor progress on a day to day basis." The three year training period covers law, economics, general business methods and data processing (from 1987), as well as taxatinn and management ac-counting techniques. It is, in fact beginning to emerge as a serious rival to an MBA as a post-graduate qualification leading to a business career — especially as it has the added attraction that students are paid while taking it.

Rates are somewhat lower in the provinces, but in London you can expect to earn somewhere around £7,500 in the first year, rising to £10,000 by your final year, by which time you will already be helping to supervise new trainees on audits and similar jobs. The Chartered Accountants Students Society of London keeps an eye on training rates, but the market itself exercises a strong upward pressure on them - as it does on salaries of qualified accountants, which start at about £15,000 and then rise quite rapidly to over £20,000.

It is, however, a very tough training.

A tough training programme faces the new graduate

The emphasis is very much towards on-the job training, which means that the theoretical part, forming the content of the two main exams, has to be studied largely at home. Liesel Payne found she was spending 15-30 hours a week on that, in addition to the time off she was given to prepare for exams under her training contract. "It's not easy to get stuck into a textbook when you've been at work all

She was put on to preparing of accounts for small firms within a month of starting her training and since then she has turned her hand to almost every type of work an accountant is likely to tackle, "I've done tax returns for all kinds of small businesses and self-employed people, I've set up business systems for startup firms. I've helped clients prepare a case for bank finance - I've even been involved in auditing voting returns for a trade union election.

attracted her to training in a small practice with only five partners. "You have to make the choice between that and a larger firm. I chose this option. because I thought I'd get more personal help here as well. It's worked out well for me, though I may move to a bigger practice eventually, in order to get exposure to the kind of problems you get with larger clients." Kendal Withers has made the opposite choice. She is in the final stages of her contract with one of the giants of the profession, Price Waterhouse, "I was attracted to the training facilities here. which are almost like a mini-university.'

Her training contract involves one exam less than that of Ms Payne because she has a relevant degree, a BCom in

However she does not feel this is an overwhelming advantage. "It's useful as a background, especially in the Part 2 exam. But a university degree is largely concerned with theoretical issues. You will have to acquire the practical knowledge." She has no regrets about having done that particular course, but she would not advise anyone to take a relevant degree purely as a preparation for accountancy. "It's not worth it when you only save taking one exam. You'd be r better doing something you really want to do.'

Failure rate for admission into the practice is high

Certainly the failure rate in the accountancy exams is extremely high. The Institute quotes the average first time pass rate as averaging only 50 per cent, and that does not include students who simply drop out. This figure is an improvement on recent years, but it is still daunting when one considers that almost 90 per cent of all trainees are now

The high 80 per cent pass rates Ms Withers quotes for Price Waterhouse indicates that success in getting students through the professional exams ought to be an important criterion in choosing a firm to train with, though practices, for their part, are also getting more selective about who they take on by looking carefully at their academic records.

However all is not lost, even for those who do not stay the course, for whatever reason. Some move on instead to take the less demanding qualifications offered by the Association of Accounting Technicians, a body set up in 1980 to validate the tier below full professional levels.

Most of those who drop out of accountancy training, though, simply go into the accounts or finance departments of companies or public bodies. There are, it seems, plenty of jobs at around £10,000 a year for anyone with accounting experience.

Denvs Smith, the successful and versatile Bishop Auckland trainer, has a good chance of landing a double at Newcastle loday with Try To Stop Me (3.30) and Deputy Monarch (4.0).

The nature of the round course at Gosforth Park should suit Try To Stop Me, who is at his best when forcing the pace in front. Adopting those tactics at York last time out. Try To Stop Me took up the running as soon as the straight was reached, and was only caught on the line by Freedom's Choice.

That I suggest was pretty good form because Freedom's Choice had run well against the much-improved Esquire in his previous race. Also, Promised Isle, who finished a close third, had been runnerup to the subsequent Royal Hunt Cup second, Siyah Kalem, in the Whitsun Cup at

The main danger to Try To Stop Me looks like being Vague Melody, who was the second leg of Lester Piggott's first double as a trainer wheo he scored at Warwick oo Saturday evening. As a result, Vague Melody is now penalized, and perhaps just a shade too close to Try To Stop Me in

Captain's Croft cracks under Niece the pressure as Britons feel strain

By David Powell

Britain's top times women discovered yesterday that there are no easy matches at Wimbledon, whatever the rankings might say. Annabel Croft, Jo Durie and Anne Hobbs, the respective national Nos. 1, 2 and were each taken the distance by opponents from way down the world order.

Miss Croft became the British No. 1 at the beginning of this year while still a tecnager but the strain of it all is proving too much for her. In going down 1-6, 6-2, 6-4 to Niege Dias, of Brazil, she suffered her third successive first round defeat and has failed to win a match in seven of the 12 tournaments she has contested this year.

Miss Dias, who has yet to break into the world's top 100, defeated Miss Croft in the Edghaston Cup a fortnight ago, but in the early railies yesterday she encountered some of the she encountered some of the reasons why Miss Croft was on the fringe of breaking into the top 20 at the end of last year. "I don't think I could have been playing any better in the first set but I just seemed to crack at 2-1 in the second," the 19-year-old Briton said.

Miss Durie, who was sup-posed to be warming-up for a second round meeting with the sixth seed, Kathy Rinaldi, almost overheated against the Czechoslovak, Marsikova. The sun beat down viciously on court one as the two engaged in one hour and 49 minutes of hit-and-miss tennis. When shadows brought mo-nentary relief to the heat midway through the final set, the Briton had just wasted two break points to trail 4-2 and it looked as if darkness was about to close in on Miss Dane's Wimbledon.

But the sunshine returned and she began to find greater rhythm. With a venomous backhand down the line, she broke back to 4-4. But it was more through Miss Marsikova's er-rors than any improvement in Miss Durie's game that the Bristohan came through 6-3, 1-6, 8-6.

That Miss Marsikova finds time to play tennis is in itself surprising. She is a competitive slatom skier, has learned to slalom skier, has tearned to speak five languages and used to be the No. 3 figure skater in her country. Miss Durie knew she was up against someone who had seen better days (Miss Marsikova was seeded in these championiships in 1981), but her while the smash was her only efficient weapon.

wouldn't say I felt satisfeid with the way I played," Miss Durie said. "I prefer to be out on the showcourts because I love the crowd watching me perform, But after the first set I was struggling all the way through to the end."

Miss Hobbs could hardly have expected Belinda Borneo to have kept her long on court six. Miss Borneo is 15 places beneath Miss Hobbs in the British rankings but needed three sets to earn a second round match against Zina Garrison, a semi-finalist last year, winning

RUGBY UNION

Demanding itinerary

By Michael Stevenson

Early next month Lancashire Schools will depart for Austra-lia, playing their first match against Western Australia Unagainst Western Australia Un-der-19 at Perth oo Sunday, July 13. During an ambitious and demaoding programme, io which the party will travel virtually the length and breacht of the continent, Lancashire will fulfil eight further fixtures, returning to England in the second week of August.

John Dewhurst, the tour man-ager and Lancashire Schools ager and Lancasane Schools secretary, is generally optimistic about the tour, as is the coach, Shawn Higgins, but money is still a real worry. Dewhurst, while very grateful for generous support from various firms over kit and equipment, is more than support from various tirms over-kit and equipment, is more than a little daunted by the fact than, apart from a belated contribu-tion from the Lancashire RFU of£1.500, all the fund-raising for the tour, which needed £31,584 ionitially has had to be done ioitially, has had to be done privately.

One would have thought that the Sports Council or the education suthorities would have wanted to make some contribution. We were grateful for Lancashire's help but not for their immediate ban at the outset on our contacting clubs to see if they would help," he said. The trouble is that increased travel commitments; especially the trip to Gunnedah, have swollen the figure needed to close on £36,000 and, despite a certain amount in the kitty, the trong many are still around. tour party are still around

"We are really desperate," Dewhorst said. "We honestly do not know where the money in coming from." At a time when England rugby is at a depressingly low ebb, it would be sad if the enterprise and initiative of those many schoolmasters, Dewhurst and Higgins among them, is not adequately sup-ported. Help from any source would be greatly appreciated. The party includes two sons of famous rugby-playing fathers, Jason Ashcroft, whose father, Alan, represented the Lions and England, and Gary French, son of Ray, the England Rugby Unico and Great Britain Rugby League forward who is more than League forward, who is now the BBC Rughy League commentator.

CRICKET: MINOR COUNTIES ARE MADE TO STRUGGLE AGAINST FIRST-CLASS OPPOSITION IN THE FIRST ROUND OF THE NATWEST TROPHY

Suffolk flatter to deceive and Sussex triumph with something to spare

By John Woodcock, Cricket Correspondent

HOVE: Sussex beat Suffolk by seven wickets. Suffolk must have hoped to win the toss and field first in this NatWest Trophy firstround tie. It would have given them a chance to get their bearings. Instead, Sussex put them in and bowled them out for 108, and by tea Suffolk had been beaten.

Sussex took nothing for granted. They were at home to Suffolk three times when the same competition was the Gillette Cup and once came close to losing to them. They are also in oced of all the victories they can get at the moment, being uncomfortably short of players and momentum. Of last year's side, Greig, Mendis and Waller have gone. Of those left, le Roux, Pigott and Lenham are injured (they were joined yesterday by Colin Wells); Alan Wells has been put into the second XI to try and find some form, and Barclay has stood down, competence from the 23rd

Suffolk began as though to make more than they did. They were 33 for one after 10 overs, with the pitch playing well and McEvoy (formerly of Essex and Worcestershire) and Clements (an Oxford captain) not overawed. But Standing, coming on with off breaks, bowled McEvoy with his first ball, and when Clements was fourth out at 49

Caley looked as though he could play, producing one fine stroke back over Standing's head, and Brooks, who has been the rounds (the Lord's groundstaff, Derbyshire and Lincolnshire), took care of himself with a good deal of though he took a good slip over until he ran out of no hurry of course—bu catch yesterday when he came partners in the 48th. Sussex, batting by 2.20, lost Alikhan to the fifth ball of their innings. While the ball was new, Green, a big fellow, moved it about enough to beat both Parker and the Sussex Green more than once. Suffolk, in fact, bowled and fielded well enough for Sussex to make quite heavy weather of scoring the runs they need-ed. Imran had taken 20 overs to make 28 when he was caught in front of the sightscreen, and Parker was 35 overs making 40. They were in no hurry of course - but it was

Glamorgan eventually defeated Staffordshire, those uncertain representatives of the Lamb's response was an attractive 80, full of crisp strokes all round the wicket. He and Bailey added 69 in 15 overs and were threatening maybem when Bailey was Daniel's first victim. Bailey edged a lifting ball and Downton took a good, tombling eatch to his right. Lamb soon followed him out when he drove a full toss into the covers. Harper and Wild were distributed in Daniel's next over. minor counties, with some com-fart, winning with 10 overs to spare, but they needed a new eighth-wieket 60-over com-petition record between Ontong and Davies to set a target beyond their opponents of this reach. Coming together when their county were in deep trouble at a 134 for seven, the pair put on 71 in 13 overs, beating the previous record of 69 set by Ruuse and David Brown for Warwiekshire nine years ago. Ontong hitting five fours in his 50 before going on to take three wickers and carn the man of the match award. Davies also had not finished etairulng six victims to equal Bob Taylor's wicket-keep-ioto the attack. Flower once acquired momentary fame by bowling Boycott in only his second match in first-class cricket at the advance stage of 35, and now he bowled with considerable accuracy and all the guile of his 43 years. He began with successive maidens and then drew Maynard forward for Griffiths to claim his first of two smart stumpings to go into lunch with the impressive fig-

The favourites dominated the seventh round of ICC Trophy qualifying games as the major teams drew on their pedigree in the Midlands yesterday. All the top sides had victories, with Zimbabwe showing their considerable strength with a 10-wicket win against East Africa in Group One and the United States, Bermuda and The Netherlands living up to their

Denmark had a vital Group One victory over Kenya but it came amid high drama io a low-scoring contest at Kenilworth Wardens, their last wieket pair sharing a stand of 26 to secure a one-wieket win. The Americans owed their convincing win against Gibralter to an unbroken third-wicket partnership of 125 between Sew Shivnarain. the former West Indian Test

Briegel, that muscular left back, was soon into theatrical prefence of an injury to his thigh when he had in fact been caught on the foot; all the old sickening stuff we had seen in the final of 1982. The goal came as Bossis brought down Rummenigge a yard outside the penalty area.

The French wall lined up; Magath tapped the free kick to Brehme, who had switched full back positions following the suspension of Berthold. He struck it left footed round

From one of many free kicks against the Germans, Giresse scooped the ball almost without pause over the gathering wall, Platini swung and shot in one movement on the volley and Schumacher plunged to his left to parry the ball one-handed.

Yet the French flame was doused almost as soon as it had flickered. Germany's pre-cise marking in midfield, their close passing and the angled running up front of Allofs and Rummenigge was beginning to pull France's defence in all directions. Briegel and Eder were combining with Allofs down the left in quick little triangles to have Amoros and Fernandez spinning in

After 25 minutes Platini lost control in a dangerous position when put in on the left of the penalty area by Bellone, hut increasingly the Germans' fierceness in the tackle was hlunting any French forward movement. Several times Platini or Bellone would jump as the tackle came in, preferring to keep their limbs intact.

A fine combination between Briegel and Eder led to Briegel having a shot blocked, Rummenigge having an open goal from 14 yards on the rebound and Bats saving with his feet in desperation. France were counter-attacking but with none of the conviction they had had against Brazil. The physical challenge of the Germans clearly discomfitted them. I thought that Platini was clearly fouled from behind as he attempted to take a ball on the turn two yards inside the penalty area hut the referee seemingly saw nothing wroog with Rolf's challenge.

There is more money in the Italian League than probably any other and that means its clubs can afford to lure the best players with lucrative contracts and appealing lifestyles. Footballers in Italy are adored and, more important, well rewarded for their endeavours.

There are a total of more than 40 overseas players currently active in Italy, including 2 number with Serie B teams. Italian clubs are wealthy because they have three sources of income. One is the attendance revenues, which yield up to £4,600,000 per team per season.

The richest clubs also make up to £700,000 a year from sponsorships and a similar sum from television rights. A number of wealthy individuals, usually club presidents, also help to support clubs, particularly in the purchasing of top players.

That is why Maradona can make £1.600.000 a year, combining his Napoli salary with personal endorsements. Platini is estimated to earn slightly less.

FIFA unhappy at organization

Zurich (AP) — Joseph Blatter, secretary general of FIFA, has said that while he is "very happy" with the World Cup tournament from a sporting point of view, he is "not happy with the way it was organized". ccording to an interview in the Eurich Tages-Anzeiger

"It was disappointing for me that the FIFA professionals again and again had to help out. That is not very satisfactory and the consequence will be that FIFA will have to exercise even more influence on the local organizers of the next World Cup," Blatter said.

"Above all, I have in mind the problem of ticket sales, which was dealt with in a very un-satisfactory way," he continued. "Especially in the first phase the stadiums were half empty and that hurt me very much."

Blatter was quoted as saying that an agreement with the organizers provided for 50 per cent of the tickets to be sold locally, mainly in a price range of about £2 to £7, while the other half would be offered internationally for about £14 to £35. FIFA had objected to the organizers selling the tickets in series, which they felt to be an excessively expensive solution. · Uday Saddam Hussein, chairman of Iraq's FA, yesterday laid part of the blame for his country's first-round exit from the World Cup on Evaristo de Macedo, their Brazilian coach. Hussein said other factors behind the failure were the referees and injuries to their top forward. Hussein Saced, and defender Adnan Dirjal.

The official Iraqi news agency said IFA had now decided to switch from the Brazilian to the German school of football.

"Of course, I disagree with that rule and manner of deciding winners and I hope they change this system of breaking ties between teams by penalties by the next World Cup," he said.

Although he had not returned with the party, there were special cheers from the supporters for Emilio Batragueho, the 22-year-old Real Madrid for-ward, who scored four goals in the game against Denmark.

Legendary characters abound in fly fishing. One of the greatest among saimon fishermen is Arthur Wood, of Cairaton, inventor and propagandist of greased line fishing on the Dec. He became famous for fishing a floating line and a small fly which was allowed as invalid.

So much for legends. It's one of the stories in The Sporting Gentleman's Gentleman (Allen LEEDS: England v India. OTHER SPORT and Unwin, £11.95), a remarkable book, full of tales from the ghillies of Tweed and Tay and spey, taken down with a tape recorder and illuminated by whisky, giving the ghillie's views of the men be worked for and telling some splendid fishing-but stories, such as Jimmy Wallace's blow-by-blow account of how he booked a partridge on the back cast. The bird flew low over the river, a salmen took the dropper and he landed both bird and fish. Many of the tales like this are so good you feel you can smell the whisky in the words.

New threat to crippled catamaran

From Barry Pickthall Newport, Rhode Island

Robin Knox-Johnston and his French crewman, Bernard Gallay, sailing their crippled catamaran, British Airways I, struggled yesterday to main-tain fourth place in the closing stages of the Carlsberg transat-lantic race. They are fighting a late challenge from Olivier Dardell and Richard le Joly's French catamaran, Alcatei.

British Airways, which has suffered damage to its centre boards and seaguil striker, which supports the 60 ft catamaran's forward beam during the 3,000 mile crossing, was left totally becalmed close to Nantucket Island on Tuesday night.
Alcatel, which was thought to be 30 miles behind Knox-Johnston's craft earlier this week, has enjoyed much fairer winds further to the south and yesterday looked set to squeeze ahead of the luckless British sailor. Among others expected to

Pelissier makes the most of his return

GOLF

From Mitchell Platts, Monte Carlo

score of 97 suggests that the experience was more of a nightmare, then nothing can be further from the truth

Pelissier, aged 68, enjoyed every one of his 280 minutes oo the Mont Agel course although he confessed to being slightly irritated by taking four putts on one green when the opportunity of a birdle beck-oned. In fact his only successes were at the first and l'Ith holes where he recorded his only two pars in a round which he finished 7-7-7. "It's the highest score I can recall checking on the European Tour," said Bill Hodge, the official recorder.

Pelissier has enjoyed more rewarding efforts. He played in the US Masters in 1953 but, as he recalled, "that was the year that I lost my putting It was then that Pelissier decided it was time to retreat from the fairways - he won the Belgian and Monte Carlo Opens and also assisted Henry Cotton, the three times Open champion, for a short while to seek a different lifestyle. The bespeciacled Frenchman now owns the Driving Range de la Côte d'Azur, on the outskirts of Nice, and as this was only his second full round of the year he was happy enough to break one hundred.

"It was a lot of fun and at least I'didn't lose a ball!" said Pelissier. "I never thought of: tearing up my card. I will be back for the second round. If I don't make the half-way cut (!)

Albert Pelissier relived a I will spend the weekend dream in the Johnnie Walker watching Severiano Monte Carlo Open here yes Ballesteros. You can always terday and if his first round learn something."

Pelissier, who was given a wild card exemption into the event, can at least rest easy in the knowledge that he did oot strike double figures at any hole. He never came close to challenging Tommy Armour's one-hole professional record score of 23, set in the 1927 Shawnee Open, and he can take some comfort that Tom Weiskopf took 13 at the parthree 12th in the 1980 Masters and Ben Crenshaw had an 11 at the 16th during the third round of the World Series of Golf at Firestone in 1976.

In contrast, Sandy Lyle was more disappointed with his score of 65. His golf from tee to green provided an ominous warning to his rivals in next mooth's Open Championship as he struck a six-iron to three feet and an eight-fron to two feet and a wedge to two feet for three birdies in his first four holes.

Lyle went on to gather seven birdies together but he still missed seven putts ranging between five and 15 feet. Lyle is convinced that, given the fine conditions which prevailed throughout yesterday, it is possible that a score lower than 60 can be recorded.
